A time for giving . . .

In lieu of sending Holiday Season cards, these JACL members and Pacific Citizen readers are participated in the Holiday Issue Project by sending their greetings to frieends in JACL through this special section. The amount of the cost involved in the mailing out of cards is contributed to this JACL/PC project which then turns over this amount as a contribution (less the $20 for a Unit-Space on this page) to the JACL Abe & Esther Hagiwara Student Aid Fund or some other JACL/PC fund to be designated bny the contributor . . . If you wish to join them here next year, let know. We'll remind you by the first of November.

MIKE in memory

by HARRY K. HONDA
Editor Emeritus

Certainly, one of the biggest stories of 1991 was the passing of Mike M. Masaoka, perhaps the most dominant figure in the Japanese American community in the century. Pacific Citizen offers a reflection of the man through some of this own writings, and a view of this civil rights leader thought the eyes, ears and words of a close friend and colleague, Grant Ujifusa, and editor with Reader's Digest.

One of the welcome tasks as P.C. editor through the years was anticipating the various columnists each week — among them the "Washington Newsletter" from the Mike Masaoka. He had started his columns in 1952 — after the long legislative battles were waged successfully in Congress for Issei naturalization and evacuation claims.

Counting the 20 years of writing a column each week, Mike wrote at least a 1,000 columns. His columns were special because of the in-depth treatment of subjects, as if he were (and probably was) writing for some staffer in Congress or Federal agency. Some samples of his earlier pieces or extracts are being reprinted as part of the Masaoka "legacy in newsletters."

Looking Back: We were often joshed about how simple the job as editor must have been with all those columnists: Bill Hosokawa (dean of the P.C. columnists, having started in mid-1942), Bill Marutani (since 1965) and cartoonist Pete Hironaka (every week since May 27, 1957); no longer contributing but still around, Larry Nakatsuka (of Honolulu Newsletter), his successor Richard Gima (now of Montebello), Henry Mori (Los Angeles Newsletter), Sachi Seko (From Happy Valley), Bodd Fukei (Seattle), Molly Mittwer (Smogites), her brother Joe Oyama (Manhatta & Echoes), Smoky Sakurada (Chicago), Kats Kunitsugu (On the Margin), George Yoshinaga (Ringside Seat), Gary Yamauchi (Foul Line), George Takei (of Star Trek fame), Rev. Roy Sano (Strictly Marginal), Barry Saiki (Nisei in Japan), Mas Manbo and Jim Henry (Japan); our roving international columnist Frank Fukunaga (El Pimentero) and Allan Beekman's book reviews.*

And oldtimers might remember JACL's national presidents who contributed almost weekly: Jerry Enomoto (Perspectives), Judge Raymond Uno (U-no Bar) and Henry Tanaka of Cleveland (Priorities); very regularly — Dr. Roy Nishikawa, Shig Wakamatsu, Frank Chuman, Shig Sugiyama and .... the stable of National Board members who kept "By the Board" hopping and lively; the reports of national and regional directors: the late Mas Satow, Jeffrey Matsui, Warren Furutani, Alan Kumamoto, Isaac Matsushige, the late Yosh Hotta, Don Hayashi, Gail Nishioka (to name the 1960-70 gang). The most humorous were the Southwester columns of Tats Kushida, once doubling as regional director and P.C. advertising manager.

Other contributors and columnists in memoriam include wartime P.C. editor Larry Tajiri (Vagaries), George Inagaki (1000 Club - Callahan's Corner), Elmer Ogawa (From the Northwest), Tomotsu Murayama (Tokyo Topics), Eiro Nagaoka (Wringing Out), Edison Uno (A Minority of One) and Saburo Kido (Living with JACL).*

In recent years, the number of steady columnists has dwindled. Space, for one thing, has become dearer. But, as the amount of advertising rises, it will mean more pages and perhaps an outbreak of a new generation of columnists and steady contributors.

A Monument in Memoriam (Oct. 29, 1954)

Washington

THIS SUNDAY (Oct. 31) is Nisei Soldiers Memorial Day. Though it marks the 10th anniversary of the famous rescue of the Lost Texas Battalion by the 442nd Regimental Combat Team in the Vosges mountains of northeastern France, it is a day dedicated to all Nisei war heroes who died not only in defense of our country but also to gain for us—the living—the opportunity to be accepted as partners in the great experiment we call the American way ....

There may be those who question the need for this special observance, saying that it is enough that we honor our Nisei war dead on Memorial Day and Veterans Day .... To understand the reasons for Nisei Soldiers Memorial Day, one has to be a Nisei evercise who remembers what happened during the 1940s.

Before World War II, eligible Nisei men were subject to the draft on the same basis as other Americans. But, following the attack on Pearl Harbor, some of those in service were (summarily) discharged and those on the rolls were reclassified as 4-C, a designation for aliens. Thousands of Nisei in Hawaii resented that designation and demanded they be given an opportunity to fight for, and if necessary to die for, the land of their birth.

Then, for persons of Japanese ancestry on the Mainland, came the Evacuation with all its heartaches and suffering. The tragedy of Evacuation was allowed to happen because there was some question as to the loyalty of persons of Japanese ancestry to the land of their birth, as against the land of their parents. The only way in which proof of that loyalty could be demonstrated, in such a way that none could again question it, was on the battlefields of World War II.

WHEN OUR GOVERNMENT responded to our demands, and authorized the establishment of a combat team that eventually became the 442nd and use of Nisei intelligence troops in the Pacific, both on a volunteer basis, the response of the Nisei themselves was highly dramatic and inspiring. The rest, of course, is military history ....

Their sacrifices, given willingly and usually volunteered, made possible all that we enjoy today: welcome acceptance, employment opportunities never even dreamed of before the war, complete elimination of discriminatory legislation, a future that we can look forward to with confidence. All this — and more — we owe to the Nisei soldiers of World War II.

THIS WRITER WOULD like to propose that the Japanese American community consider the placing of an appropriate monument to our heroic dead in the Nation's capital where, among the Nation's heroes, it would be in proper company as a constant reminder to all Americans that the slant of one's eyes not reflect the slant of one's heart, that the cost of racial intolerance runs high, that all Americans are of a common patriotism ....

Here in Washington, there are many monuments to individual heroes, to groups and units, to commemorate historic events such as the raising of the American flag on Iwojima. But to me, a Nisei, no monument could be more appropriate and in keeping with America's heritage than one especially dedicated to our own war dead, for their sacrifices which have gained so much should be forever enshrined in memory for all to see and marvel and to understand.

(Ed. Note — The Go For Broke National Veterans Association launched a campaign for such a monument in 1989.)

Civil Rights of 1960 (April 22, 1960)

Washington

AS THIS IS written, there appears to be every indication that what will be the Civil Rights Act of 1960 will have cleared the House and on its way to the White House for signature this weekend. The last known obstacle to House approval of the 16 Senate amendments appeared to have been removed when longtime civil rights foe, Rep. Howard Smith (D-Va.), chairman of the Rules Committee, agreed to call a meeting of his powerful committee and to clear the amended bill for House debate.

Smith, it is recalled, bottled up the civil rights bill reported by the House Judiciary Committee last August until March this year when some 210 and the 219 signatures required to discharge his committee from consideration of the legislation forced him to call a meeting that cleared the measure for eventual House passage.

In the 1957 Civil Rights Act, it was a bill devoted almost exclusively to voting rights. The 1960 bill is intended to be essentially a supplement to that 1957 act and to make more effective the voting guarantees of that statute.

A leading segregationist whose State is considered to be one of the leading offenders in denying the Negroe the right to vote, South Carolina Gov. E. F. Hollings asserted that the new law to be "will have little impact on this State."

Militant chief counsel Thurgood Marshall of the NAACP agreed, saying that it "isn't worth the paper it's on." But the Administration and the Democratic and Republican leaderships in both houses of the Congress insist that the latest efforts represents a forward step toward achievement of the civil rights ideal.

SINCE THIS IS is a presidential and congressional election year, and since every state, including those in the South, have both local and national elections in November, the voting rights provision of this new statute can be put to an early test.

Moreover, since the Attorney General who drafted the original language of the section for voting referees and with the responsibility for enforcing its provisions, there should be no question of adequate enforcement for the government's chief law officer accepted the House and Senate modifications as workable.

[The column continues with delineation of the six titles of the Senate version, which were felt the House would accept.] In brief:

Title I makes obstruction of a Federal court order "by threats or force" a crime punishable by a $1,000 fine, a year in jail or both.

Title II brings the weight of Federal investigation and prosecution against arson and bombing.

Title III requires state officials to keep for 22 months

all registration records and ballots for Federal office.

Title IV authorizes the Civil Rights Commission to administer oaths to witnesses at its hearings.

Title V empowers the Federal government to arrange for education of children of military personnel when public schools in any locality are closed to avoid segregation.

Title VI provides for the voting referees procedure.

THE JACL, OF course, deplores the watered-down process .... JACL also deplores the failure of the efforts to amend the bill in both the House and Senate to extend the civil rights assurances to more than voting and to truly meaningful legislation.

But, with the Administration and the bipartisan leadership of the Congress committed to voting rights as the maximum for this session, there was no alternative but to accept what the Congress appears willing to approve in the hope that our fears regarding its enforcement are groundless and that this step, though a minor one, will go another forward step toward the achievement of full civil rights for all our citizens.

JACL in International Relations (Sept. 12, 1958)

Washington

THE GLORY OF JACL has been that whenever grave policy questions had to be made, our National Council representing the more than 80 chapters of our National organization, has invariably come up with the right answers at the right time.

The most recent example of this phenomenon was our historic reversal of policy at the 15th biennial National Convention held last month in Salt Lake City, when the council voted 57 - 1 to consider all major problems with international implications, especially as they may relate to Japan, which directly affect the welfare of Americans of Japanese ancestry on a one-to-one issue basis through a specially establish National Committee on International Relations. Some ten chapters, because of specific instructions, refrained from voting, thereby demonstrating near unanimity in the final balloting after exhaustive three day deliberations.

THE DISCUSSIONS, FIRST in the National Legislative-Legal Committee and then in the National Council revealed that, in spite of the much-publicized differences of opinion, there was general agreement that JACL should confine its concerns in the international field to those relating to Japan which directly affect Americans of Japanese ancestry and then, only to actual or proposed legislation before Congress and actual or proposed administrative action by the Federal Government.

There was no suggestion that JACL should become either an apologist for our State Department or a Japan lobby or that JACL would undertake to become involved in any and all questions relating to U.S.-Japan relations including commercial and political matters.

The only suggestion was that in those few matters relation to Japan which directly affect the welfare of Americans of Japanese ancestry that may be under consideration by the Congress or the government, the JACL, on a selective basis, along with many other national and local organizations with an interest in the maintenance of friendly relations between the U.S. and Japan, would refer the subject to a special national committee for study and recommendation.

Its report would then be reviewed by the National Board before national policy would be determined. In cases of real controversy, it is anticipated that the subject would be referred to the individual chapters for reactions before the ultimate decision.

(In the following week's newsletter, "American Committee on Japan," Masaoka describes how this committee would function: "(Though) not JACL, its charter members are all JACLers who believe as Americans they have a duty to promote understanding and friendship between Japan and the U.S., especially in these critical times when cooperation is essential to peace and prosperity in the Pacific.

"(It is) imperative that we make our concerns known to Congress and to the government, lest by default these views are ignored as it is vital to the free world that Japan remains steadfast and influential bulwark of democratic forces in the Far East."

Challenge to JACL (June 24, 1960)

Washington

RECENT DISTURBING EVENTS in Japan, culminating in the withdrawal of the invitation by the Kishi government for President [Eisenhower] to visit Japan, has transformed the 16th Biennial National JACL Convention (at Sacramento) from what appeared to be a routine gathering to what may well be the most momentous and challenging since World War II.

The "image" of a New Japan, carefully built up since 1946, as an orderly, responsible, civilized nation has been damaged, if not destroyed, by the tragic riots and demonstrations in which mob rule forced representative government to yield. The so-called "Japan boom" that has been so popular of late in the U.S. threatens to boomerang as Americans, already embittered by the threats and insults of the likes of Nasser, Castro and Khrushchev piled on one after another, express disillusionment and even disgust with Japan and things Japanese.

The Mike I knew

A colleague, admirer, and friend pays tribute to Mike Masaoka, the man, his life, the kind of person he was. The speech was given at a recent Intermountain district meeting at Jackpot, Nevada.

By GRANT UJIFUSA

Thank you very much, Denny, and my thanks also to the IDC for inviting me to be here. I grew up in Wyoming, way in the inaka, but not far away from Jackpot, Nevada, by measures of distance used in the West. So this for me is a little like coming home. It's also home because I think of both Denny and Hid as older brothers, and fiercely protective nee-sans at that.

Together we fought some astonishing battles inside the JACL, because there were, as always within the organization, some legitimate differences of opinion. But for me, when the full story of Redress is told, careful scholars will say that without Denny Yasuhara and Hid Hasegawa, our efforts in Washington would have died a slow death. For one thing, without Denny and Hid, the LEC would have never been created. The LEC is deeply indebted to both.

All of us are also deeply indebted to Etsu Masaoka, honoring us with her presence tonight. From what I could see: No Etsu, no Mike. And so without her, our entire history as Americans would have been different — a history diminished. For me, Etsu is a like a woman out of a classic Japanese novel —exquisite, and at the same time brainy, strong. Aristocratic in the best and still a real woman in the real world. After Etsu and Mike and I were together, I always came away feeling that she had figured out what needed to be done before the men in the room had the slightest clue.

Thank you Etsu for everything you have done for the life of our community.

Because Etsu is here, it is hard to believe that Mike is really gone. But he is gone: when the giant spruce falls, the forest at least in Wyoming is silent.

I owe Mike for what has been the most deeply satisfying experience of my life. He got me on to the LEC Board. In one respect anyway the JACL, like most organizations, is like the old Chicago Machine. An important dictum of Mayor Daley: "We don't want nobody that nobody sent." So when I showed up, the questions were: "You from Wyoming? Who sent you?" The answer from Denny, Shig Wakamatsu and others: "Mike sent him." "Well, then, that's okay," the West Coast people said. "Mike sent him, you say."

What kind of man was Mike Masaoka? For me, one quality stood out. Mike had a sweetness, an ineffable gentleness, about him. When he smiled, the whole world just had to smile with him. Because he was gentle, he was strong. In his smile, there was what Jesus and the Buddha would call compassion and also what the Japanese would recognize as melancholy – the koto, itsu music vanishing into the night even before the string is plucked.

Thousands of Japanese Americans knew the Mike I knew, and so when his critics said Mike was thus and so, thousands responded quietly: "No, no, you've got it all wrong. I've worked with the guy. Believe me. You can't turn the milk of ordinary human kindness into something political."

Mike's melancholy was there in part I think because he knew that he was as able as anybody in Washington. Yet because of the racism that prevailed, he was a solitary figure on Capitol Hill, the only Asian face to be seen — before the day of Inouye, Matsunaga, Mink, Mineta and Matsui — and not long after racial hysteria sold newspapers for the now fashionably liberal Los Angeles Times, San Francisco Chronicle, Sacramento Bee and Seattle Times. We sometimes forget that Japanese Americans were regarded as disloyal not just by the rabble-rousing Walter Winchell but by the then politically correct, cerebral and cool Walter Lippmann.

Yesterday's media was very different from today's. No way could Mike turn to it. So he went alone to lobby Congress —then the preserve of Southern, segregationist committee chairmen — to shame them into granting our Issei citizenship. Shame them into admitting the gap between the plain words of the Bill of Rights and the lives of those who, even before they were herded into camps, could neither vote nor own land.

Very little money, no political numbers, no institutional sources of power, all Mike had to work with was courage — the one virtue, he knew, without which there are no others.

Courage and of course the valor of the 442 of which he was himself the founding father, those two things Mike had. In the end, the Japanese American community won the Immigration and Naturalization fight by overriding Truman's veto. This was the real political miracle, not Redress.

"Who is this quiet Oriental guy who smiles so politely?" the old-time white politicians would ask. But Mike himself knew that he could think as fast as anybody in town. Was the Washington of the '40s and '50s fair? The pre-Martin Luther King Washington, was it fair? No. Did that stop Mike? No. Was personal potential not completely fulfilled one source of melancholy for him? Yes, I think it was.

Once in a while Mike would ask me, "How are you getting along at work, Grant? And is your book selling?" "I'm okay," I would say. One time I added, "You know, Mike, you've been my Senator ever since I can remember." There was a pause, and his voice softened. "Thank you, Grant," he said. "Thank you." Maybe old Joe Kennedy had it right. "Life," he said, "is a transaction between generations." Life is this way, which is perhaps why melancholy is sometimes our companion.

The short version of the truth is this. Mike was a political genius in whom uncompromised idealism was married to street-smart savvy. He was an artist, who for me is just somebody who really knows what he is doing – some are farmers, some electrical engineers, some seemingly ordinary mothers and wives.

During the Redress campaign, many times I would ask, Mike, what are we going do? The sky is falling down. "Give me the night to sleep on it," he would say. Next morning he would say, "Our strategy is going to be a cat." And he would draw one using five quick brush strokes. What emerged was a real, live cat on paper. Order and direction out of chaos, Mike could get that. An uncanny, practical and obvious answer that no writer of a textbook could possibly imagine.

Let me give you an example. The House passed our bill in mid-September of 1987. In early February of 1988, we knew President Reagan was willing to sign H.R. 442. Still as March became April, the

Already, newspapers have interpreted what has happened in Japan to be another "Pearl Harbor," for the Japanese have repaid with ingratitude and humiliation of our President and nation the billions we have poured into his reconstruction and rehabilitation after her defeat.

Some congressmen have called upon boycotts of Japanese imports, while others have suggested economic reprisals. Some businessmen have cancelled orders placed in Japan, while others are cautiously holding up decisions pending whatever happens.

The epithet "Jap" is again commonplace in headlines, and editorial cartoons depicting the mobsters in Tokyo are resorting to WWII stereotypes with buck teeth, horn-rimmed glasses, etc.

For the first time since the war, the Washington JACL Office has received phone calls damning "us" for what we are supposed to be doing to the President and reviving General DeWitt's 1942 admonition to the Tolan Committee — "A Jap's a Jap! And, giving him a scrap of paper showing his citizenship won't change that!"

IN WORLD WAR II, through no fault of our own and because of activities over which we Japanese Americans had absolutely no control, we were forced to undergo indignities and mistreatment because of, as the Supreme Court expressed it, "our affinity with the enemy."

It appears again that because of the action of a third party, Japanese Americans may be subjected to harassment and discrimination because of our identification in the public mind with recent events in Japan. We do not, of course, suggest that anything comparable to evacuation will take place; we do, however, believe that suspicion will again be cast upon us and that, taking advantage of strained U.S. relations with Japan, there will be some who will attempt to foment prejudice and bigotry once again, to the end that our current welcome acceptance by our fellow Americans may be circumscribed. The doctrine of "guilt by association" may be revived to embarrass and irritate us in employment, in housing, in the various activities that go to make up our daily lives.

The image of Japanese Americans as a brave and loyal American who overcame great odds that was so painfully and painstakingly created during and after World War II is now threatened with confusion and association with the "image" of the treachery, barbarity and irresponsibility of the Japanese mob.

To do less is to default our responsibility to protect and to promote the welfare of Americans of Japanese ancestry in this nation.

JACL IS CONVINCED that the overwhelming majority of the people in Japan are pro-America. At the same time, we are very aware that there are many there who sincerely oppose the Kishi Government and even the Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security. But what happened in Tokyo, we think, demonstrates that the Japanese people do not yet understand the workings of democracy and representative government.

When the Socialists, who are the elected minority in the Diet, discovered that they did not have the votes and could not legally maneuver to prevent House ratification of the Treaty last May 19, they resorted to violence. This is not in accordance either with constitutional procedures or freedom of expression.

The initial student, labor union, and Socialist demonstrations may have been legitimate expressions of unrest and dissatisfaction, but it appears quite evident that in the final bloody days before the withdrawal of the invitation to the President, the riots were taken over by disciplined masterminds trained in Peiping and Moscow as part and parcel of the worldwide Communist policy to discredit and insult the U.S. and the President that began at the ill-fated Paris summit meeting.

AND WHEN THE mobs substituted violence and lawlessness for representative and orderly procedures, the overwhelming majority of the Japanese we know to be pro-U.S. in sentiment refrained from intervening on behalf of law and order—thereby contributing to the anarchy and rule of the mob.

We believe that the Japanese majority failed to intervene because they do not understand that in a democracy we must stand up and be counted when its principles are threatened—that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty and freedom, that once a mob is allowed to subvert majority rule, dictatorship is on its way.

We Americans of Japanese ancestry are beneficiaries of the democratic way; we are, in a real sense, the living example of democracy in action; a democracy that, in spite of the shortcomings and abuses on occasion, has more than made up for its World War II excesses.

Perhaps as another program to which the National JACL Convention should give priority is to consider ways and means — on a people-to-people basis — by which the JACL may make our contribution to a better understanding of the meaning and workings of democracy to the 90 millions in Japan in order that representative government may survive and everywhere else that it may be under attack internally or externally.

AS JAPANESE AMERICANS, whether we acknowledge it or not, we are aware that the degree of acceptance in this nation—whether we resent it or not—is largely dependent upon the cordiality of relationships between the United States and Japan, for what the American people think of Japan as a nation and as a people reflects their acceptance of us as persons of Japanese ancestry.

Accordingly, it makes sense if the Convention takes another long, hard look at its so-called international relations policy. In a shrinking world, faced with the possibilities of nuclear annihilation, when most peoples and nations are expanding their outlook and vision, we Americans of Japanese ancestry can hardly be the only ones to be retreating toward isolationism and nationalism.

... Recalling the spirit and vision, as well as the courage, of those who met in the spring of 1942 to decide what course JACL should take as an aftermath of the attack on Pearl Harbor and [Executive Order 9066], many of us are hopefully confident that, once again in the great JACL tradition, we will be "Better Americans in a Greater America."

Milestones in Nisei History (June 17, 1955)

Washington

THE POSTWAR HISTORY of persons of Japanese ancestry in the United States has been marked by many notable achievement, each representing a kind of milestone along the road that the Issei and Nisei are travelling toward an America that is free from racial prejudice and bigotry.

Because it seems that these milestones are reached so quickly and easily in this period when general acceptance is the rule and not the exception, persons of Japanese ancestry have begun to accept as commonplace that which, a few short years ago, would have been hailed as unprecedented, miraculous, sensational.

The week of June 6 - 11, for example, witnessed several noteworthy attainments to which even the Japanese American press gave only casual mention.

Tashiro Confirmation — On Monday, June 6, the Senate judiciary committee unanimously and favorably reported the nomination of Benjamin M. Tashiro to be a federal district judge in the Territory of Hawaii. The next afternoon, the U.S. Senate unanimously accepted the committee's recommendations and confirmed the presidential appointment of the first Nisei to sit on the federal bench.

Tashiro's confirmation represents the first time in congressional history that an American of Japanese ancestry was given a public hearing as an executive nominee, was favorably reported by both the subcommittee and full committee considering the appointment, and confirmed without single dissent by the full membership of the Senate.

For the first time, the Senate handled this nomination as a routine matter, which it was, and did not attach any special significance to the fact that the presidential appointee was of Japanese ancestry ....

A precedent has been established for the nomination and confirmation of qualified Nisei for all federal responsibilities.

California Legislature — On Wednesday, June 8, the 1955 session of the California state legislature adjourned. In the prewar and immediate postwar sessions, it was considered a major achievement if the Assembly and the Senate did not enact some measure directed against persons of Japanese ancestry in California.

As an indication of the changed climate of public and legislative opinion toward persons of Japanese ancestry, this past session enacted three bills benefitting Californians of Japanese ancestry and killed one that might have operated to their serious detriment.

"Most impressive" of the beneficial bills related to old age assistance to the Issei. As worded, it will be confined almost exclusively to the aged indigent Issei because its benefits are limited to aliens over 60 years of age before Dec. 24, 1952 (the effective date of the Walter-McCarran Immigration and Nationality Act), who have resided in this country for 25 or more years prior to that deadline and who were ineligible for naturalization until the enactment of the 1952 Immigration and Nationality statute.

The bill represents special privileges only to the Issei. It also takes into account the historical truth that until 1952, the Issei were not eligible for naturalization throughou no fault of their own .... Thus many who came to California more than half a century ago .... will be eligible to receive Old Age Assistance from the Golden State as a kind of belated recognition of their invaluable contributions to their state and nation. Few would have dared dream that California, of all states, would enact, and unanimously at that, privileged legislation for the alien Japanese. About the most that was hoped for was simple equality with all other Californians.

Alien Land Law — In 1913, the California legislature enacted its first alien land law.... This basic discrimination was later incorporated into the laws of 13 other Western states. Seven years later (1920), the voters of California made this racial discrimination a part of the state constitution. Without a doubt, this rank discrimination prohibiting the ownership of land by alien Japanese, who were then in the overwhelming majority since the Nisei, at the time, averaged less than six months in age, was more responsible than any other single statute for the relatively depressed economic situation of the Japanese American community.

As a matter of fact, the Issei might have controlled California agriculture and the Japanese American group might well be one of the most prosperous in the entire land.

The 1955 California legislature repealed the 1913 law outright and ordered that the 1920 initiative measure be referred to the electorate in the November, 1956, election for annulment. While it is true that the state supreme

Pearl watch

By GWEN MURANAKA
Assistant editor

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The JACL reacted favorably to President Bush's remarks on the 50th anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor.

Cressey Nakagawa, JACL president, said the remarks are "significant in indicating the great advances this country and the Japanese American community have made in the last 50 years."

Speaking at the Punchbowl Cemetary in Honolulu where many veterans from World War II are buried, Bush said, "Here lies valiant servicement of the 442nd Regimental Combat Team and of the Military Intelligence Service—Americans of Japanese ancestry who fought to defeat the Axis in Europe and in the Pacific."

In a reference internment of Japanese Americans during World War II, Bush said, "They committed no crime. They were sent to internment camps simply because their ancestors were Japanese. Other Asian Americans suffered discrimination, and even violence, because they were mistaken for Japanese. They, too, were innocent victims, who committed no offense."

Later at a speech before World War II veterans and families, Bush again mentioned the internment and "all the glories and disgraces of the past." "We in the United States acknowledge such an injustice in our history: The internment of American of Japanese ancestry was a great injustice, and it will never be repeated," said Bush.

Reacting to the Bush statements, Nakagawa said, "These statements are examples of the efforts that must be made if we are to move beyond the hatred and hysteria that led to the internment."

"It's a recognition that there were two tragic events at Pearl Harbor— first, the loss of life and American's entry into war, and second, the events from that day that led to the violations of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights for 120,000 people who were interned in American concentration camps because of their ancestry," said Nakagawa.

"Following the passage of the Civil Liberties Act of 1988, which provided redress to Japanese Americans interness,

Throughout 1991, the tension seemed to grow more intense as the 50th anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor grew near— JACL remained poised and ready to respond but for the most part the reaction seemed relatively mild . . .

President Bush's remarks on the internment, coming at the time it does serves as a call for all Americans to increase understanding an acceptance of those of different ethnic and racial groups, and to end the bigotry that runs counter to the principles we as a nation embrace," said the JACL president. "It helps to put this shameful episode into proper perspective at a time when perspective is so critically needed."

In Honolulu. . .

"I'm extremely pleased with President Bush's acknowledgement of Japanese Americans," said Bill Kaneko, president of the Honolulu chapter of JACL.

Kaneko said, "Pres. Bush certainly communicated the kind of tone and sentiment we've been stressing for the past several months—reconciliation and letting go of old memories."

For JACL, Bush's recognition of Nisei war veterans and the injustice of the wartime internment of Japanese Americans was the culmination of a year of planning for the Pearl Harbor 50th commemoration.

Cressey Nakagawa, JACL president, said, "We are gratified that the year long effort of the JACL in this campaign has resulted in a greater public awareness of the experience of Japanese Americans during World War II."

On Nov. 15, a group of JACL officials met with Bush's staff to discuss Bush's participation in the Pearl Harbor anniversary. Members of the delegation were: Cressey Nakagawa, Grant Ujifusa, Pat Okura, Tom Kometani, Ben Obata, Joe Ichiuji, Ray Murakami, Judge Shiro Kashiwa, and Grayce Uyehara. In addition, JACL officials met with Pat Saiki, head of the Small Business Administration and one of the highest Asian Americans in the Bush administration, and officials in the Pentagon.

Kaneko said they informed Saiki, a former Congresswoman from Hawaii, of some of the JACL concerns about Pearl Harbor, because the Bush administration had asked Saiki about what should be included in the Pearl Harbor speeches.

Discussing the JACL plan for Pearl Harbor of focusing attention on the media, government relations, law enforcement, and educational programs, Kaneko said, "Look at the four major areas of the program, I think we covered them all. The important thing is that we came out in front of this months and months before. We took the lead and it paid off because we were prepared."

"The critical link was made between December 7th and the internment. It lays groundwork to the next 50th anniversary, E.O. 9066," said Kaneko.

Bemusing over the part the Honolulu chapter had in the Pearl Harbor anniversary, Kaneko said, "Northern Cal thought we were dead. They were going to kick us out, but we're alive and well."

In Chicago. . .

The 50th anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor was marked by a gathering at the Daley Center Plaza with members of the Chicago Nisei Post 1183 playing a major role in the program along with hundreds of other veterans.

Tom Kaihara, a former member of the 100th Battalion famed as the "Purple Heart Battalion," presented a wreath since he was one of the survivors of the attack on Pearl Harbor.

THE Year in Review

Written and compiled by GWEN MURANAKA
Assistant Editor

1991—it's almost over, hang in there. In a year that has seen the collapse of the Soviet Union, the continued woes of the U.S. economy, and the emergence of David Duke into the national political arena, maybe we should all take a collective sigh of relief. We made it. 1991 was a year that began with America on the brink of the Gulf War and ended with America returning to Pearl Harbor. Here's a roundup of the events and issues that shaped 1991 for the Japanese American community.

Jan. 2— JACL Legacy Fund Campaign Committee announces contributions to the Legacy Fund reach the $1 million mark after only three months. The committee, along with the National Board and the JACL staff along with three part time Legacy Fund coordinators worked to reach together and as of Jan. 8 the Legacy Fund was at $1,136,788.37.

 IN REMEMBRANCE ***

This is my story, from a faraway place,
And because of what had happened, it can never lose its trace.

This is my story, which continues to come
from out of the past;

This is my story, and there are so many who appear in the vivid cast.

This is my story of all those who were there,
yet remained so brave and unfalteringly
true;

This is my story, and this is my praise, to all who were there, who will continue to be in bright and shining view.

YEAR IN REVIEW

bill that would establish Manzanar as a national historic site, thus making it easier to pass in the Senate Committee for Energy and Natural Resources.

Lloyd Ray Piche was sentenced to four years in jail for violating the civil rights of Jim Loo and six other Asian American men. The maximum sentence for the charges was six years. Department of Justice prosecutor, Suzanne Drouet, the JACL, the Organization of Chinese Americans, and Rep. Robert Matsui issued statements protesting what they saw as a light sentence handed down by Judge James Fox.

October 18—The JACL national board urged the repeal of United Nations General Assembly Resolution 3379 that equates Zionism, the idea of self-determination for the Jewish people, with a form of racial discrimination.

October 23—In Los Angeles, Aida Dimaranan, a Filipino nurse, won a limited victory in her suit against the Pomona Valley Hospital Medical Center's policy of "no-Tagalog" constituted an English only policy. Dimaranan claimed in her suit that she had been demoted and transferred because of her challenge to what she believed to be an English-only policy.

To the protests of the JACL and State Sen. Patrick Johnston (D-Stockton), California Gov. Pete Wilson vetoed S.B. 353, a bill that would have protected redress money for Japanese Americans on Medi-Cal.

October 24-28—Sen. Daniel Inouye, Los Angeles City Councilman Michael Woo, and newly appointed head of the Peace Corps, Elaine Chao, were among the Asian American leaders urging unity within the diverse Asian American community at "the Asian American Experience: Looking Ahead," a national symposium sponsored by the Asia Society in Los Angeles.

In Phoenix, three teen-agers held in connection with the Aug. 10 murders of nine people at a Thai Buddhist monastery.

November 7—The Southeast Japanese Community Center in Norwalk, Calif. was broken into and racially vandalized. Among the racial epithets painted in the judo dojo were "Go back to Asia," "Nips," and "Go home." The incident was the third in two weeks.

After Pres. George Bush agreed to a compromise, the Civil Rights Act of 1991 passed the Senate by a 93-5 vote. The bill ignited outrage within the Asian American community because of the Wards Cove Packing Company exemption which excluded the largely Asian Pacific American and Alaskan natives who filed suit against Wards Cove from the Civil Rights Bill. JACL National Director Dennis Hayashi said, "The passage of the Civil Rights Bill with the Wards Cove exemption would be nothing but an empty, if not hypocritical, victory for civil rights."

November 8—The Los Angeles Police Department (LAPD) in a consent decree promised to promote more Latino, African American, and Asian American officers to higher ranks of service. At a press conference sponsored by the Asian Pacific American Legal Center, Lt. Paul Kim, one of only two Asian American lieutenants on the force said, "I think this (consent decree) puts some official seal that we do exist."

November 8-10, the JACL National Youth Conference held in Torrance Calif., was the opportunity for over 90 representatives from campuses and Asian American organizations from across the country to meet and discuss issues facing the Asian American community.

November 15—Leaders of JACL summoned to the White House to discuss with Pres. Bush's staff to discuss Pearl Harbor and Bush's participation in commemoration activities.

H.R. 3748, the "Justice for Wards Cove Act," authored by Rep. Jim McDermott (D-Wash.), receives strong support from a coalition of 26 representatives, including Rep. Norman Mineta, Rep. Robert Matsui, and Rep. Patsy Mink, who were among those who introduced the bill to the House. H.R. 3748 would repeal the Wards Cove Packing Company exemption in the Civil Rights Act of 1991. The JACL, the Organization of Chinese Americans, and the National Asian Pacific Bar Association, held joint press conferences in Washington D.C., San Francisco, and Seattle announcing their support of Rep. McDermott's bill.

November 29—In Phoenix, four men charged with the murders of 9 people at a Thai Buddhist monastery were dismissed because enough doubt existed regarding their confessions. Defense attorneys claimed that the confessions of the four men were coerced and there wasn't sufficient evidence to link the four men to the crime.

Asian American leaders from California area went to Phoenix to meet with religious, ethnic, law enforcement, and government officials to discuss ways of improving communication. Among those participating were, Jimmy Tokeshi, regional director Pacific Southwest District JACL; Stewart Kwoh, executive director of the Asian Pacific American Legal Center; Yvonne Lee, executive director of the National Chinese American Citizens Alliance in San Francisco; and Mapet Panichpant, coordinator of the United Thai Council.

November 20—In Washington D.C., the bill that would designate the Manzanar internment camp as a national historic site moved out of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee and onto consideration by the full Senate. The move was made possible by an amendment by California State Sen. John Seymour which, in response to concerns by the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power, stipulated that the designation would not affect existing water rights.

In a followup to the Nov. 7 racial vandalism of the Southeast Japanese Community Center, Los Angeles County Supervisor Kenneth Hahn announced that the L.A. County Human Relations Commission will be conducting an investigation of the incident in conjunction with the District Attorney and Sheriff's Department. In a press conference on Nov. 15 the Norwalk City Council announced a $10,000 reward for information leading to the perpetrators. Earlier in the month, the community center agreed to put up a $5,000 reward.

In Honolulu, JACL opened a media center and annex to accomodate the hundreds of journalists in Hawaii covering the 50th commemoration of the bombing of Pearl Harbor. "The media center is part of JACL's proactive approach to advocate for peace and understanding, as well as focus on current issues in the Japanese American community," said William Kaneko, president of the Honolulu chapter of JACL.

December 2—In spurts of unrelated violence against Asian Americans before the Pearl Harbor commemoration, a Vietnamese restaurant in San Jose was set on fire.

In late November the home of a Chinese American in Laguna Beach, California was broken into and spraypainted on the walls were swastikas and the words, "Oriental out," and "Chinese out."

A Japanese American homeowner in Claremont Calif. awoke to find feces on his front porch and the words "You riceball, eat s—" spraypainted on the garage.

In Phoenix, Leo Valdez Bruce, one of the four men

Program hopes to help Asian Americans stricken with fatal blood diseases . . .

By GWEN MURANAKA
Assistant editor

As the holidays approach and people rush around frantically looking for the perfect gift, the volunteers at the Asians for Miracle Marrow Matches, founded in August of 1991, work to give the most important gift—life. For over 100 Asian Americans across the country suffering from fatal blood diseases, their only hope for a cure is a bone marrow donor from an unrelated matched donor.

According to the National Marrow Donor Program, there is a desperate need to recruit Asian Americans to the donor registry. Although chances of finding a match is often very slim, the chances are stronger for people with the same racial background. As of this Fall, of the 406,379 people who have volunteered to be on the registry, only 22,098 are Asian Americans. Asians for Miracle Marrow Matches is working to even up the odds for those suffering from fatal blood diseases. Recently, Asians for Miracle Marrow Matches became an official bone marrow donor recruitment group for the National Marrow Donor program. The following are profiles of three people who for different reasons have devoted themselves to finding miracles matches.

The high school student

Mindy, a 17-year old Korean American, who was diagnosed with chronic mylogenous leukemia when she was in the 9th grade, is in many ways like every other junior in high school. She does peer tutoring afterschool in geometry and is a member of the Bible club. She enjoys playing piano and guitar, and is very active in church. But Mindy has come forward because she and other Asian Americans who suffer from fatal blood diseases need help.

"Right now, I'm really healthy. Sometimes I forget I'm sick, but everyday I have to take a pill and it reminds me that I'm not like everyone else."

Mindy found out about Asians For Miracle Marrow Matches about two months ago after her doctor gave her the number of the National Marrow Donor Program in Minnesota. Her sister, who currently lives in Korea, was tested as a possible match, but the results were negative. Now, Mindy is going to the Asian American community to find someone who is a bone marrow donor match.

"Friends have been asking me how they could get their blood tested," said Mindy. "I'm planning to have a bone marrow donor drive at my church. They've been very enthusiastic, they're praying for me. I'm positive there will be a lot of people."

At church, Mindy is involved in the youth choir, Bible study, and helps put out a monthly newsletter. Mindy's faith in God has always been an important part of her life, but as she was diagnosed, it has taken on new significance. "I found a lot of strength in God. It's ironic, when I first was diagnosed in the hospital, I felt really peaceful. I knew that God was with me."

"It was worse when I didn't know. I was afraid of going to the hospital because I was afraid I might find out something really bad, which I did. But I really felt closer to God. Through Him, all things really work out."

Mindy stressed the importance of her coming forward, informing the public of the need for bone marrow donors. "There is a purpose for me to have leukemia.If my name comes out, it might inspire people to come out to be tested. It is not just for myself. I want to do all I can to help people who are in need. I think that's what God intends me to do."

"Once in a while I do become depressed. But I know there must be a reason why I was chosen. If through this I can help to encourage other people to be in the (bone marrow donor) registry, then that might be worth it. That makes me happy. The bottom line is, I'm happy."

The relative

For Sharon Sugiyama, chairwoman of Asians for Miracle Marrow Matches, her commitment to finding bone marrow donor matches comes from her nephew Nick Suzuki who died at 35 of acute lymphocytic leukemia. Suzuki was employed with the 3M Corporation and travelled regularly to South America when was diagnosed with leukemia in Nov. of 1990. Suzuki's family began to conduct bone marrow drives on their own. In twelve drives, they were able to sign up 1,400 people to the national bone marrow donor registry; the final drive took place on June 30, the day after Suzuki's funeral.

"Nick was very appreciative," said Sugiyama. "When we signed up 200 people, he said, 'That's 200 more hopes for myself or someone else.'"

"He realized that the hope for finding a donor was very slim, but he continued to be encouraged," said Sugiyama. Her voice welling with emotion as she remembered her nephew, Sugiyama said, "He was very gregarious, giving, people-oriented. Wherever he went, he would send postcards to his grandma because he knew how much pleasure she would get from them."

"The bone marrow drives were a tremendous effort. It consumed our lives and still does. My sister (Kathy Ninomiya) and I feel a deep commitment to the possibilities it has for giving life to people who otherwise have no hope," said Sugiyama.

Sugiyama had praise for the courage of patients like Mindy who are willing to go public with their illness. "I think the public responds positively when they hear about the patients, they become the focus point of our drives. I know there are over a hundred patients looking for donors. Because of privacy protection we don't know all of their names. Sometimes people are reluctant to go public, we encourage patients and their families to contact us."

"On a personal level, Nick's death was such a loss. He just had so much more living, so much more to contribute.The goals (of Asians for Miracle Marrow Matches) are very important. It's to give hope to people who will die without this chance to live. It's possible. What we're lacking is donors," said Sugiyama.

Speaking on her loss and her continued participation in Asians for Miracle Marrow Matches, Sugiyama said,

See BONE/page A47

They need your help.

- Jonathan MacGowan—Boston, Mass., 19-years old, Korean adoptee suffering from acute leukemia. Currently in remission, he's been looking for a donor for about a year. Although over 8,000 have stepped forward to be tested, no compatible donor has been found.
- Gordon Wu—Canada, 2-years old, suffering from the terminal disease, familial hemphagocytic lymphohistiocytosis (FHL). Diagnosed in Sept. of 1990.
- Richard Wong—Cerritos, Calif., 16-year old student at Cerritos High School, suffering from aplastic anemia.

How to become a marrow donor

- Must be 18—55 and in good health
- Give 2 tablespoons of blood and consent to be placed on the national bone marrow donor registry.
- Your blood is HLA (Human Leukocyte Antigen) typed.
- Your HLA-type goes in the computer. The lab results are stored in a main computer which is searched internationally.
- A preliminary match is determined.
- Additional blood tests are required. Additional blood samples will be taken to determine if you are a precise match for a specific patient in need.
- The "miracle match" is identified.
- You make the decision to donate.

With 'Rhapsody' Kurosawa shows he is still the master

By MARTHA NAKAGAWA
Special to the Pacific Citizen

Even before Rhapsody in August, Akira Kurosawa's 29th film, has been released nationally in the United States, there is controversy surrounding this movie. Some people feel Rhapsody is nationalistic and anti-American. It is neither. Rhapsody speaks to the human heart and depicts the consequences of war—more specifically how three generations of one family has been affected by the atomic bombing of Nagasaki during World War II.

Movie review

In light of the recent activities surrounding the 50th anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor, Kurosawa feels that "There are so many things that we should be discussing with Americans. The issue of the atomic bomb is one." It is uncertain, however, whether Americans are ready to share a sense of guilt for the atomic bombing portrayed in Rhapsody.

The film opens with four children reading a postcard from their parents recounting the wonderful reception they are receiving in Hawaii from their grandmother's long-lost brother. The children are spending the summer with their grandmother (played wonderfully by Sachiko Murase) who lives in the countryside just outside of Nagasaki. The postcard invites the grandmother to fly over to Hawaii and be reunited with her ailing brother, a prosperous pineapple grower. Being one of 10 siblings, the grandmother has a difficult time remembering this particular brother and is not anxious to acknowledge his existence in America, especially since her husband and several relatives were killed by the atomic bomb during World War II.

The grandmother begins to share the family history with the grandchildren, skillfully weaving in the Japanese fondness for ghost stories with events surrounding the atomic bombing. She talks of one brother who painted nothing but eyes after the bomb was dropped.

The grandchildren are fascinated by these stories but are also eager to go to Hawaii. They finally convince the grandmother to go, but she makes it clear that she will go after Aug. 9, after she has paid her annual homage to the atomic bomb victims. She writes a letter to her brother in Hawaii which prompts her half Japanese, half Caucasian nephew, (played by Richard Gere) to visit her. In the scenes that follow, three generations of the family come to grapple with the horrors of war and its affect upon their lives. The youngest generation wishes to learn; the middle generation wishes to forget; and the oldest generation remembers forever.

At the end of the film, the grandmother rushes into a raging storm towards Nagasaki, her physical frailty belying her spiritual strength. This scene of comedic pathos fuses all the elements into one moment of perfection, and the audience was left laughing in tears. It is one of the most powerful and beautiful scenes that Kurosawa ever created, and the audience will understand why this man is a living legend in the film industry.

Indeed during a speech given by Richard Gere when he was presenting the1991 AAPAA (Association of Asian Pacific American Artists) Lifetime Achievement Award to Kurosawa, Gere jokingly noted that "Everyone has ripped this man off. From Lucas, Spielberg, Coppola." When reflectifg upon his experience working with Kurosawa in Rhapsody, Gere recalled that he did not understand Japanese and Kurosawa did not understand English. They communicated through an interpretor and "when it (the filming) was over, he got out of his director's chair, and came over to me. He's a very big man, and I thought he was going to attack me. But he put his big arms around me in a bear hug, and I felt his heart against mine."

The screenplay for Rhapsody is based on Kiyoko Murata's short novel Nabe No Naka (Inside the Pot) about a grandmother and her family discovering the existence of a wealthy relative in Hawaii. It was Kurosawa, however, who added the element of the bombing of Nagasaki, and through this, Kurosawa explores the various emotional ties between Japan and the United States. This is not a movie which accuses or pardons the two countries for the war but "is about something that we tend to forget in these modern times—the heart of man."

Rhapsody officially opens in theaters on Dec. 25, 1991. Two benefit premieres, sponsored by AAPAA (Association of Asian Pacific American Artists), were held in New York and in Los Angeles. Both premieres received great support from community leaders, celebrities, and entertainment executives. The Benefit Committee for the premieres consisted of such luminaries as Woody Allen, Francis Ford Coppola, Jonathan Demme, Richard Gere, George Lucas, Martin Scorsese, and Oliver Stone.

Legacy Fund

JACL programs—the mission moves on

By GRAYCE UYEHARA
Chair, Legacy Fund Campaign

To continue the dialogue on "What after Redress for JACL?," the question was answered with clarity and poignancy by the JACL leadership and chapter members who responded to the clamor of the media and requests for speakers during the month leading to the Dec. 7 commemoration of the 50th anniversary of Pearl Harbor.

JACL, driven by its commitment to justice for all and for the elimination of racism, learned well from the lesson of the injustice of the removal and the incarceration of 120,000 Japanese Americans from their homes, their jobs, their schools, and their community that we must be proactive in educating the wider public about the Japanese American experience.

JACL is the only national organization with a network of 114 chapters whose mission is to protect the human and civil rights of Americans of Japanese ancestry and all Americans. Through its leadership role to secure redress, the organization is in the position to implement this mission by its hard won political credibility and its continuing presence in Washington.

A high priority agenda item at the July and October JACL National Board meeting was the planning and development of a program to reduce the potential for racial exploitation, including Japan-bashing, vandalism, ethnic polarization, and violence which could result from the Pearl Harbor commemoration.

Bill Kaneko, Honolulu Chapter president and a national JACL vice president for Program and Development, and the JACL staff, designed a media packet which was sent to the chapters to use in their community.

On Nov. 15, at a meeting called by the White House staff working on President George Bush and the Department of Defense's participation at the planned events at Pearl Harbor on Dec. 6—7, the JACL invitees expressed their concern on the focus of the commemoration, reminding the staff of the subsequent tragedy of Executive Order 9066 which led to the en masse removal of Japanese Americans from the West Coast. The beginning of that war should be remembered for its loss of lives and the suffering which followed but also we should move on to peace and understanding.

The JACL members who saw action in battles of Europe and in the Pacific talked of their personal experience as veterans of the 442nd Regimental Combat Team and the Military Intelligence Service.

On Nov. 27, Bob Simon, President Bush's speech writer, called me to ask about the Japanese Americans who fought in the Pacific war since he was not aware of their story. I told him the MIS men made the difference in the Pacific front and he could talk to those veterans right there in the D.C. area.

JACL made an impact at the White House meeting which was reflected in his Pearl Harbor speech. He lauded the Japanese Americans who fought in the American armed forces during the war and reiterated the nation's regrets over the internment of thousands of Americans of Japanese ancestry in the hysteria that swept the nation after the attack on Pearl Harbor.

I left the JACL press packet at the White House meeting, explaining that the packet contains factual background information about the Japanese Americans after Pearl Harbor.

The Philadelphia JACL chapter carried through with the recommendations for Pearl Harbor strategy, the task having been made easier with the complete media packet. The same level of activities were repeated throughout the nation.

A great number of media and speaker requests came to me since both JACL headquarters and the Washington office referred most of the east coast requests to me—from Connecticut to Florida.

In Philadelphia, William Marutani, who served on the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians and a veteran of MIS, Herbert Horikawa, director of counseling at Temple University who also does volunteer work with Southeast Asian refugee youths, Allen Okamoto, born in Philadelphia who volunteered for the 442 and received the Bronze Star and three Purple Hearts, Hiroshi Uyehara, who in 1941 was fired by the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power and saw the traumatic events of Terminal Island where his father was locked up and myself were interviewed individually for the National Public Radio's carefully planned two-day program to recap the events and the nostalgia of that time. The half-hour segment with us was broadcast on Dec. 6 and then on Dec. 7, the broadcast continued for 6 hours which included segments from broadcasts of 1941 interspersed with recollections of many individuals from the Philadelphia area, including the 5 Japanese Americans.

The Philadelphia TV channels also taped interviews about the incarceration of Japanese Americans and the war experience. The Philadelphia Inquirer featured an SEATTLE—"In our kids' time, we will not get rid of the racial prejudice in our country," says Wilce Shiomi. "With all the Japan-bashing that's going on, we will need some kind of voice to fight racism, and the most viable voice is JACL." Referring to his grandsons, 10 and 15-years-old, Shiomi expressed his belief that as Sansei, Yonsei got older, they will be made to feel different and will experience some of the racial discrimination that the Nisei endured in a more visible form.

Because of his strong belief that JACL is needed, Wilce Shiomi expressed his support with an extraordinarily generous donation of $10,000 to the National JACL Legacy Fund. He felt that if it were not for JACL, redress would not have happened. Realizing the need for a strong national organization to provide the clout for these types of national issues, he said he also liked the fact that by donating to the Legacy Fund, his donation was helping the Seattle chapter.

Shiomi, who was born during Woodrow Wilson's administration, learned recently when he attended the funeral of his older brother in Los Angeles, that his unusual name was his father's version of Wilson. Born and raised in Seattle, Shiomi graduated from Cleveland High School prior to the outbreak of World War II. He married Mitsuko (Mitsie) Saiki in 1942, who graduated from Kirkland High School on the eastside. The couple will be celebrating their 50th anniversary next year.

When evacuation was ordered, the newlyweds were sent to Puyallup along with other Seattlites, but when volunteers were requested to go to Tule Lake, the Shiomis relocated to Spokane; Wilce served in the army for a brief period, then the couple returned to Seattle in 1946, six weeks after their daughter was born.

Upon their return to Seattle, the Shiomis started a small business with a used appliance store on Yesler Way. After eight years, they bought a larger store at 12th and Jackson, retaining the previous name of Connors. Eventually, Shiomi developed a very successful business carrying new appliances and home furniture. Retired since 1986, Shiomi has been a long-time Thousand Clubber, and a JACL member "as long as I can remember."

He says he "takes it easy now," trying to play golf more seriously, and travelling with his wife, Mitsie.

How it works

Ten percent of the Legacy Fund earnings shall be deposited into a Grants Distribution Pool for the purpose of funding Chapter and District Council Programs. The programs must be consistent with the JACL Program for Action to be considered for funding.

The portion of Legacy Fund earnings designated for the Grants Distribution Pool will be of great interest to Chapters and District Councils in search of funding. Bill Kaneko, National V.P of Planning and Development and Chair of Legacy Fund Grants Committee stated "Quite often, the Chapters and District Councils have some very innovative program ideas, unfortunately they often lack the financial resources for carrying out such programs." Kaneko continued by stating, "The Legacy Fund Grants Distribution Pool could turn out to be the alternative funding source for implementing some of those program ideas."

The Legacy Fund Grants Committee comprised of the recently appointed: John Hayashi, PSW District; Cherry Kinoshita, PNW District; Joanne Mukai, NCWNP District; and Bill Kaneko; will evaluate the proposals to the Legacy Fund Grants Distribution Pool.

For interested chapters and districts, the application forms and procedures are currently under development. The materials will be available in January of 1992. All proposals must be submitted to National Headquarters for consideration. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact Clay Harada, Legacy Fund Administrator or Janelle Reiko Sasaki at JACL National Headquarters, (415) 921-5225. Chapters and District Councils are encouraged to apply.

Here are facts on the Fund

Q. WHAT IS THE JACL LEGACY FUND?
A. The Legacy Fund is a perpetual endowment from which only the earnings will be used to implement the organization's mission, its purposes, and its Program for Action.

Q. WHAT IS THE JACL'S MISSION AND PURPOSE?
A. JACL's mission and purpose are to secure and uphold the human and civil rights of Americans of Japanese ancestry and to promote and preserve the cultural heritage and values of Japanese Americans.

Q. WHAT IS THE JACL PROGRAM FOR ACTION?
A. The JACL Program for Action consists of the goals, objectives and activities the JACL pursues within its program. These are the priorities that have been determined by the membership through its delegates. Examples of program items and initiatives of concern include the accurate portrayal of the Japanese American experience in textbooks, addressing and pursuing incidents of violence toward Asian Americans, addressing acts of defamation and Japan-bashing which negatively affect Japanese Americans and advocating for and against legislation which affects Japanese and Asian Americans.

Q. DOES THE JACL DO THINGS THAT DIRECTLY AFFECT ME?
A. Most definitely. Every time the JACL speaks out on an issue or decries the use of slurs or condemns intolerance, it affects you. More concretely, the JACL played an important and central role in the legislative campaign for redress. The JACL advocated for the establishment of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment whose recommendations formed the basis for redress legislation. Also, the JACL actively organized a national redress movement of organizations and individuals that lobbied for the successful passage of the Civil Liberties Act of 1988.

Q. IS MY CONTRIBUTION TAX-DEDUCTIBLE?
A. Yes. The JACL is classified as a non-profit civil rights and education organization which allows contributions on a tax-deductible basis.

Q. HOW WILL INDIVIDUAL CHAPTERS BENEFIT FROM THE JACL LEGACY FUND?
A. The Legacy Fund is designed so that chapters will receive direct financial benefit from the Fund. Twenty percent of the annual earnings of the Fund will be distributed to the chapters through the District Councils for the life of the Fund in direct proportion to the amounts raised by the chapters.

Q. WILL THE LEGACY FUND PROVIDE PROGRAMS FOR THE JACL?
A. Yes, in two ways. First, ten percent of the earnings of the Fund will be made available annually to chapters and district councils for local program use for the life of the Fund. Secondly, the earnings will support the programs within the JACL Program for Action which consists of all the activities and services the JACL provides for its membership.

Q. WHO WILL OVERSEE THE LEGACY FUND?
A. The Legacy Fund Committee will be appointed by the JACL National Board. The Legacy Fund Committee will set goals for investment return and monitor the Fund performance. In addition, the Committee will distribute 20% of the earnings to the chapters through the district released in connection with the Buddhist temple murders, filed suit for false arrest.

November 27—Rep. Norman Mineta's highway and mass transit legislation that would create a comprehensive network of roads, bridges and transit systems across the country was approved by the U.S. House of Representatives.

November 27—The bill that would designate Manzanar a National Historic Site was approved a voice vote in the Senate.

November 28—The Keidanren, Japan's leading organization of corporations, pledged $10-million to the Japanese American National Museum, the largest donation to a Japanese American cause according to Irene Hirano, JANM executive director and president. Keidanren representative, Yoshimi Ishikawa, said the donation pledge was a belated recognition of the debt Japanese owe their U.S. cousins.

December 4—Former Klu Klux Klan David Duke announces his candidacy for the Republican nomination for President. At his news conference in Washington D.C., he makes disparaging remarks about the "broken English" of Japanese Americans. JACL issued a statement condemning Duke's antagonism towards Asian Americans.

December 7—Pres. George Bush and First Lady Barbara Bush placed flowers in the waters above the U.S.S. Arizona. Earlier, Bush in a series of speeches praised the heroism of Japanese Americans during the war and vowed that the internment would never happen again.

December 7—In Sacramento, Calif. the glass door of a maju shop was sprayed with gun pellets.

December 8—In Lompoc, Calif., the front window of a Japanese restaurant was blown out by a small explosive device taped to the window.

Passings: James C. Purcell, 85, died Feb. 13 of a heart attack. Purcell took the Mitsuye Endo case to the U.S. Supreme Court pro bono paying for expenses, because of his outrage at the evacuation of Japanese Americans from the West Coast.

Dr. Robert Arden Wilson, professor of Japanese history at UCLA, died Nov. 26 after a long illness. Dr. Wilson collaborated with Bill Hosokawa on East to America, A Fulbright scholar, Dr. Wilson also wrote Genesis of the Meiji Government in Japan, University of California Press, 1957.

Henry Taketa, 77, a founding member of the Sacramento JACL, died Oct. 20 of a ruptured aorta. Taketa was known as "Mr. Sacramento JACL."

court declared this legislation unconstitutional in the 1952 Sei Fujii and Haru Masaoka cases and the Walter-McCarran Act nullified its purposes by eliminating race as qualification for naturalization, nevertheless, the twin acts [in Sacramento] represents a remedial spirit that few would have predicted even a short decade ago.

Gardeners' License Bill — The bill which would have licensed all maintenance gardeners in California was killed in the last session by ordering an interim Assembly committee to hold hearings on it during the summer. There was much thought that this seemingly innocuous bill as drafted might have seriously impaired the ability of thousands of Issei and Nisei gardeners to continue to earn a livelihood.

First Refugees from Japan — On Saturday, June 11, 48 Japanese refugees arrived from Japan aboard the President Cleveland in San Francisco. They are at work, at this time, on the farms of their sponsors in Central California. They are the first adult refugees to be admitted from Japan outside the regular quota under the Refugee Relief Act of 1953.

Old timers believe that this is the first large contingent of Japanese to arrive in California for employment at a single farming operation since the Gentlemen's Agreement of 1908, signed to discourage immigration from Japan.

Unlike the earlier Japanese pioneers of fifty years ago entering a hostile land, these 1955 immigrants were welcomed to California. They had jobs awaiting them at guaranteed prevailing scales. They will not be exploited as cheap labor. Not shacks but government certified housing is available to them.

All the great and human progress made in agriculture in the past half century is now theirs. And opportunities for the future are far more promising than that which greeted the Easthay Issei in the early 1900s. May they make an equally impressive contribution to the land of their adopted as did the earlier predecessors from Japan.

Count on Clovis

The Clovis Chapter, with a membership of 100, raised $16,500 through Sept. 30, 1991. In front row, from left, are Yoshiko Yamamoto, Ruth Kunishige, Masao Yamamoto, and Dale Ikeda. In back row, from left, are Travios Nishi, Fumio Ikeda, Yoshito Takahashi, and Hifumi Ikdea. The chapter mets its first-year goal of $16,000 as part of its $40,000 goal over the three-yeras LegacyFund campaign.

FACTS

councils and finally, the Committee will hire a Fund manager.

Q. WHAT IS THE GOAL OF THE JACL LEGACY FUND?

A. As of October 31, 1991, we have raised over $2.4 million. Our goal is to raise $10 million over a 3 year period beginning in October 1990. We believe this goal is realistic because we believe we can count on your support and the support of others to carry forward the important work of the organization. JACL has always relied on membership dues to support the organization. We value our membership and we will continue as a membership organization, however, it is important to also create other sources of revenue which an endowment will provide.

Q. CAN I MAKE A PLEDGE IF I AM UNABLE TO CONTRIBUTE IMMEDIATELY? A. Yes, you may pledge using a contribution card which can be obtained by contacting JACL National Headquarters.

Q. HOW WILL THE LEGACY FUND CONTRIBUTORS BE RECOGNIZED?

A. A permanent record of all contributors will be published in an official registry. This registry will be sent to all major contributors. Additionally, the Pacific Citizen will print a monthly listings of the most recent contributors.

Q. WHERE CAN I GET MORE INFORMATION ON THE JACL LEGACY FUND?

A. More information may be obtained from the Legacy

MISSION

article on their commentary page by William Marutani.

Mayor Wilson Goode of Philadelphia issued a proclamation recognizing December, 1991 as a time of prayer and remembrance of all the Americans and Japanese Americans who suffered following the events of Dec. 7, 1941. At the press conference on Dec. 5, Mayor Goode added after reading his proclamation, "Hatred and hate crime will not be tolerated in this city. We have set the tone in the Mayor's office. We want to make it clear that all people are welcome in this city. That is the purpose of this proclamation today."

Teresa Masbori, governor of EDC, and I, as a member of the Philadelphia chapter took the JACL's concern about the possibility of violence on Dec. 7 to a meeting with the Mayor's Commission on Asian Pacific Affairs, chaired by Taiwen Law, and the representative from the Philadelphia Human Relations Committee. The JACL press packet related to the 50th anniversary of Pearl Harbor was given to Twiswen Law, chair of the Mayor's Commission on Asian Pacific Affairs, to be used for the preparation of the Mayor's proclamation.

Masbori, Uyehara, and Allen Okamoto spoke to the gathering at the press conference.

To avoid vandalism which had taken place during the past year at the Japanese House and Garden in the lovely setting of the noted Philadelphia Fairmount Park, the JHG Board headed by Hiroshi Uyehara expended $500 for security coverage on Dec. 6 and 7. No vandalism was reported at the accessible sight.

The Philadelphia Inquirer informed Teresa Masbori that the World War II events did not end with Dec. 7. They plan to feature other historical events which took place during the five year period. So, the educational task will continue.

Further, leaders of Asian American organizations have agreed that there is rising violence against Asian Americans and that we will have to coalesce in resolving anti-Asian violence.

Lastly, as chair of the JACL Legacy Fund Campaign, I realize that the JACL membership and the community are not apprised of the depth and range of JACL's effort and influence in its continuing educational work for the betterment of our community. The leadership at the national and chapter levels are so busy responding to the many requests for programs and information that we sell the organization short when the activities are not reported. After all, public relations about JACL is not our mission.

This review of recent activites is to assure our relationship and supporters: JACL is moving forward with numerous programs which assures us that JACL is doing things that make a difference at this time and place of its more than 60 years history.

For those generous contributors to the second phase of our Legacy Fund campaign, Legacy Fund has reached $2,729,000 as of Dec. 4. We hope to reach the $3 million mark by Dec. 31, 1991.

Affairs Commission, the sponsor of the program spoke emphatically at the Daley Center program about the great patriotism of Japanese Americans during World War II.

Major General James Mukoyama, Jr. who is commanding general of a division in the reserves was interviewed extensively by TV reporters. Other Post members interviewed by various media reporters were Sam Yoshinari, Victor Inui, Mita Kodama, Art Morimitsu, Hiro Mayeda, Tom Kaihara, and Sam Ozaki.

Elsewhere in Chicago, on Dec. 6, Midwest leaders of the American Jewish Committee and the JACL marked the anniversary by warning of the potential for backlash against Japan and Japanese Americans.

"The potential to racially exploit the 50th commemoration is real," said Chiye Tomihiro of the JACL. "Because the threat of racism has profound effects, we must deplore any attempts to create negative emotional messages that would adversely affect Japanese Americans or Asian Americans."

Jonathan Levine, midwest regional director of the American Jewish Committee, said that while it is important for Americans to remember the tragedy of Dec. 7th, 1941, there is a need "to remain vigilant against the uglier excesses of that solemn observance: bigoted rhetoric about and racially-motivated attacks on Japan and Japanese Americans."

In Sacramento. . .

A day before the 50th anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor, representatives of the Florin chapter of JACL and other civil rights groups in the Sacramento area spoke out against the possible scapegoating of Japanese Americans for Japan's attack.

"Japanese Americans were not responsible for what happened at Pearl Harbor, and we're not responsible ments saying, "We must do all in our power to ensure that no one gets away with convenient scapegoating."

Other organizations in the coalition were the Sacramento chapter of the JACL, the Nisei Veterans of Foreign Wars Post #8985, the Asian Bar Association of Sacramento, the Sacramento chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Sacramento Human Rights and Fair Housing Commission, the Chinese American Council of Sacramento, the American Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee, and the Filipino American National Historical Society.

In separate incidents which underscored the continued need for vigilance within the civil rights community, the glass door of a manju shop in Sacramento was sprayed by a pellet gun on the evening of Dec. 7, and Mary Tsukamoto, co-chair of the Redress and Civil Rights committee for the Florin chapter received hate mail on Dec. 5.

"People who have had a similar experience can understand. We're on a mission. It wouldn't feel right to just drop it. I need to continue and if we don't share it, we wouldn't be fulfilling responsibility to community, or to Nick."

The Donor

Vic Fukuhara was one of the many family friends who came out to be tested when Nick Suzuki was first diagnosed with leukemia. The owner of a lawn mower shop in Long Beach, Fukuhara received a letter from the Red Cross on Sept. 26 that he was a possible match. The only thing Fukuhara knows about the person whose life he might be saving is that he's a 20-year old Japanese American male.

"I know I'm going to match, even though it's a 10,000 to 1 shot. Down at the Red Cross they asked, 'Are you willing to go all the way?' There's no question—I wanna save the kid's life," said Fukuhara.

Fukuhara said he heard "horror stories" about people who matched with a patient only to back out at the last minute. When a match is found, the donor undergoes a simple surgical procedure which usually requires an overnight hospital stay. The marrow replaces itself within a few weeks. For a week to ten days, the donor feels some soreness, which is usually described as a dull ache in the lower back area, but to Fukuhara, his own discomfort is irrelevant.

"His (the patient's) pain is a million times worse than mine. I'm just trying to do my little part. What I say is, it'll hurt when I sit down, but when I stand up, I'll be taller."

"I've been just trying to find more information. If its possible, I would like to meet the patient and his family. I gave him a nickname, "Toshi." I would love to pray for this guy and without a name it's kind of hard."

For more information on Asians for Miracle Marrow Matches, write or call: Asians for Miracle Marrow Matches, P.O. Box 7514, Long Beach, CA. 90807-7514, 310/490-7230.

If you're interested in finding out the location of the donor center near you or are interested in starting adonor drive in your local area, call the National Marrow Donor Program at 1/800/654/1247.

MIKE

Senate had not acted. Spark said that he had assurances from Majority Leader Bob Byrd that the Senate would soon enough take action. But he wouldn't and it didn't.

We were afraid that Reagan, who hadn't gone public, might change his mind; that the clock was running out on the 100th Congress; and we knew that Byrd from the poor state of West Virginia was no keen backer of Redress. For decades, East Asian steel had done the West Virginia mills and voters no good at all.

What to do? How could we pressure Byrd without endangering Spark's relationship to him? I didn't know, but the watchword, I felt, had to be haiyaku. Mike said, "Give me the night to sleep on it." In the morning, he said, "We have to talk to Alan Cranston, the Whip and the number two Senate Democrat from California and a strong Redress supporter." "That's it," I said, "that's the little cat."

Two days later, Mike called and said, "No need for that appointment. I sat at the same table with Cranston at a Democratic fundraiser last night and talked to him about our problem. I asked Cranston to talk to Byrd."

About a week later, Byrd scheduled our bill for floor debate, and it passed thanks to Spark's having gathered 72 co-sponsors. But co-sponsors are no good unless they have a chance to vote on the Senate floor.

Toward the end, Mike was a bit bloodied, but forever unbowed. In my view, his fevered critics stood on his shoulders and cuffed him about the ears. All of this never got to him.

I last saw Mike about a month before he died. Etsu said Mike's heart wouldn't pump enough oxygen to his brain, and big blocks of memory were gone. I sat there, and Mike sometimes didn't know who I was. "You say you're from Wyoming. Do you know so and so, the Nisei who designed bridges on the Lincoln Highway?" he asked. "I don't," I said, thinking to myself that this was forty years ago. "But I will try to call him as soon as I can."

As I left the Masaoka house, it hit me. Here Mike was about to die. He was embarrassed because his mind floated in and out. And yet...and yet...he was still at work trying to forge one more Japanese American connection, a connection that might some day, in some way, help us to claim our share of The Promised Land.

We are here tonight to honor you, Mike. We cherish your memory, we shall never forget. Rest in peace, gentle and great warrior.

Christmas Blessings

Special Loan Delivery From Wells Fargo.

COMING THROUGH FOR PEOPLE WITH LOWER INCOMES.

Wells Fargo offers special Low Income Finance Term (L.I.F.T.) loans to people who may not meet conventional loan requirements. These loans feature longer terms, so your monthly payments are at a minimum.

Wells Fargo L.I.F.T. loans can be used to pay for furniture, appliances, autos and auto repairs, medical expenses, job education, or home improvements.

The requirements for getting a L.I.F.T. loan include showing proof of steady employment, a good credit record, and a qualifying low income level.

To learn more, visit your local Wells Fargo office. Or call 1-800-338-3038, ext. 116.

FUJIMORI

After one year

Peru's Nikkei President Alberto Fujimori took over a country beset by political turmoil and poverty . . . How has he done after his first year in office? Pacific Citizen writer Harry K. Honda reviews his accomplishments and difficulties...

In 1990, Alberto Fujimori was a political unknown, who began campaigning for the presidency of his country from his tractor.

His fellow Nikkei in Peru were apprehensive, fearing their own political stability and well-being, as delicate as it might be, for their memory of anti-Japanese discrimination in Peru was still fresh and volatile in many minds. They remembered that during World War II, approximately 2,000 Japanese were arrested, shipped to the United States and detained as "pawns in a triangle of hate" (to borrow the phrase from the title of Prof. C. Harvey Gardiner's book on this question).[1]

Historical Background in Brief[2]

The first Japanese immigrants, 790 to be exact, arrived in the spring of 1899, April 3, aboard the Sakura Maru at Callao (ka-ya o). Peru welcomed the Japanese (braceros) as skilled farmers. Japan was encouraging emigration, hurting as she was economically in wake of the Sino-Japanese War (1894 - 95). Furthermore, Japanese shipping firms and emigration agents alike were out to make a profit. The ships would transport them to wherever agents could recruit men between the ages of 20 and 45 for the haciendas and plantations, which would hire at a fixed wage (about one yen per day) and deduct from their pay the fare for passage.

Early immigrants labored on sugar and cotton plantations along the coastal strip of Peru. Then health problems, especially in the malaria infested north, dysentery and typhoid fever, heavy work in cutting cane, and greedy employers who reduced wages, led to wholesale departures from plantations. It led to shortening the contract period from four to two years, then one year, and down to six months. Consequently, the Japanese workers became more mobile.

By 1910, one-time contract workers gradually farmed on their own as tenant farmers or moved into the towns and cities to become shopkeepers, barbers, cooks or as domestics in Peruvian households. It was an opportunity for the Japanese to master Spanish, learn Peruvian ways and become independent.

By 1923, the emigration companies had transported nearly 18,000 Japanese, mainly from Okinawa (20%), Kumamoto (14%), Hiroshima (9%), Fukuoka (6%), Yamaguchi (9%) and Fukushima (7.5%), as recorded by Amelia Morimoto, a researcher of Japanese Peruvian history.[3] No one knows how many more arrived illegally, but it was common knowledge that Peruvian passports were on sale to Chinese and Japanese in Hong Kong and Yokohama for about 1,000 soles which, in the early 1940s, was equivalent to US$15.[4]

After the labor contract system was abolished in 1909, immigrants arrived independently or as a "yobiyose," one who was called over by a relative or friend in Peru. during the 1920s (1918-1928). They settled immediately in the municipalities.

Once an Issei farm laborer launched into his own commercial enterprise in Peru, especially in Lima, the competition was spirited even among themselves. By 1936, notes Gardiner, there were 13 separate Japanese business associations in Lima, of merchants, cafe owners, barbers/hairdressers, bazaar owners, charcoal dealers, chauffeurs, importers, jewelers, hotel owners, restaurateurs, fruit & vegetable peddlers, bakery shop owners, and building contractors.[5]

The 1940 Peruvian census listed about 80% of the 17,598 Issei and 8,790 Nisei lived in the Lima-Callao metropolitan area.[6]

The Meiji Japanese spirit was not quenched in the Issei overseas whether in California, Canada or Callao - as the patterns of cultural differences emerged between emigrants and native residents. The economic envy, native prejudice, a fear of Japanese is often characterized as being "a misunderstood minority." Part of that picture was a self-gathering, a hanging together as the kenjinkai (prefectural club), the "tanomoshi" (mutual aid society) and preserving Japanese culture and language with the "gakuen" and Japanese newspayers. (The Andes Jiho was the first newspaper, founded in 1913 in Lima, later to become the Lima Nippo.)

Japanese clubs mushroomed throughout neighborhoods in Peru. In turn, it led to establishing the Peru Chuo Nihonjin-kai (Central Japanese Association of Peru) in 1917. On the side were the athletic clubs and cultural societies. In the later years, Japanese immigrated as family units; bachelors made quick trips to Japan for a bride or had married Nisei daughters of earlier pioneers.

Becoming Peruvian also meant being enveloped in the Spanish- Catholic traditions of Peru.

Anti-Japanese sentiment flourished in Peru in the two decades before World War II. Japanese immigrants inherited the half-century-old Peruvian dislike of the Chinese who first came as "kuli" (the Peruvian term) laborers in the guano deposits in the 1850s and in greater numbers to build the railroads in the 1870s. The 50,000 Chinese constituted the largest foreign-born group in the 1876 census.[7]

In the rural areas, Peruvians who insisted the Japanese had taken control of the select and fertile agricultural areas (such as the Chancay Valley, about 50 miles north of Lima) clashed with the Issei farmers. In the urban areas, there were cries of unfair competition and monopoly practiced by the Japanese barbers and others. The Peruvian press also reflected and fanned the ill-feelings and difficulties.

The Great Depression of 1930s compounded the anti-Japanese tempers. The government sought to eliminate Japanese interests and enterprises by such laws that required 80 percent of any work force be native Peruvians (Decree #7505 of April, 1932) and slapped quotas on cotton goods in 1934.

Immigration quotas were established in 1936, which especially hit the Japanese, the most numerous foreign born in Peru, with an annual quota of 150. The officials, resenting Japanese immigrants retaining their citizenship, also made naturalization proceedings difficult for Peruvian Japanese. (Unlike the U.S., both Peru and Japan recognized citizenship by blood - "jus sanguinis" - and dual nationality.) In July, 1936, granting of naturalization papers to Japanese was suspended and of late birth registrations annulled.

During the late 1930s, Peruvians even viewed Japanese aggression in China might happen to them. Rumors spread in the papers, further adding to their resentment of the Japanese community and private Japanese schools. The Japanese business and cultural associations were suspected as a cover for a military organization. The successful Hoshi Pharmaceutical Co. in the interior

Veterans HONOR ROLL

Besides the full names of Nisei GIs who served in combat during World War II with the 100th, 442nd Infantry and Military Intelligence Service, the name criteria selection (NCS) committee presents over 13,000 names for the honor roll to be engraved on the monument to be placed in the First Street North Plaza at E. First St. and Central Ave.

As a primary checklist in these pages of the 1991 Holiday Issue are names listed in the Military Intelligence Language School Album (1945), Ambassador in Arms: Story of the 100th Battalion, (1944), and Americans: the Story of the 442nd RCT (1945). These met the guidelines of Nikkei in military service between Dec. 7, 1941, and Sept. 2, 1945.

Harry Akune, NCS committee chair, said Nikkei civilian cadre at the MISLS; non-Nikkei in combat at least 90 days, wounded or KIA, while with the 100/442nd and or any Nikkei (none of the above) with a battle star or arrowhead indicating combat duty also counts.

Those who wish to use their English, Japanese name or nickname must contact the NCS committee. Those who wish to add missing names from the Holiday Issue listing should request a Nomination Application from the NCS Committee, 1438 Oak St., Los Angeles, CA 90015.

While there is no direct cost for nominating, qualifying or having a name in place on the honor roll, individuals may contribute $200, the line cost for engraving the name.

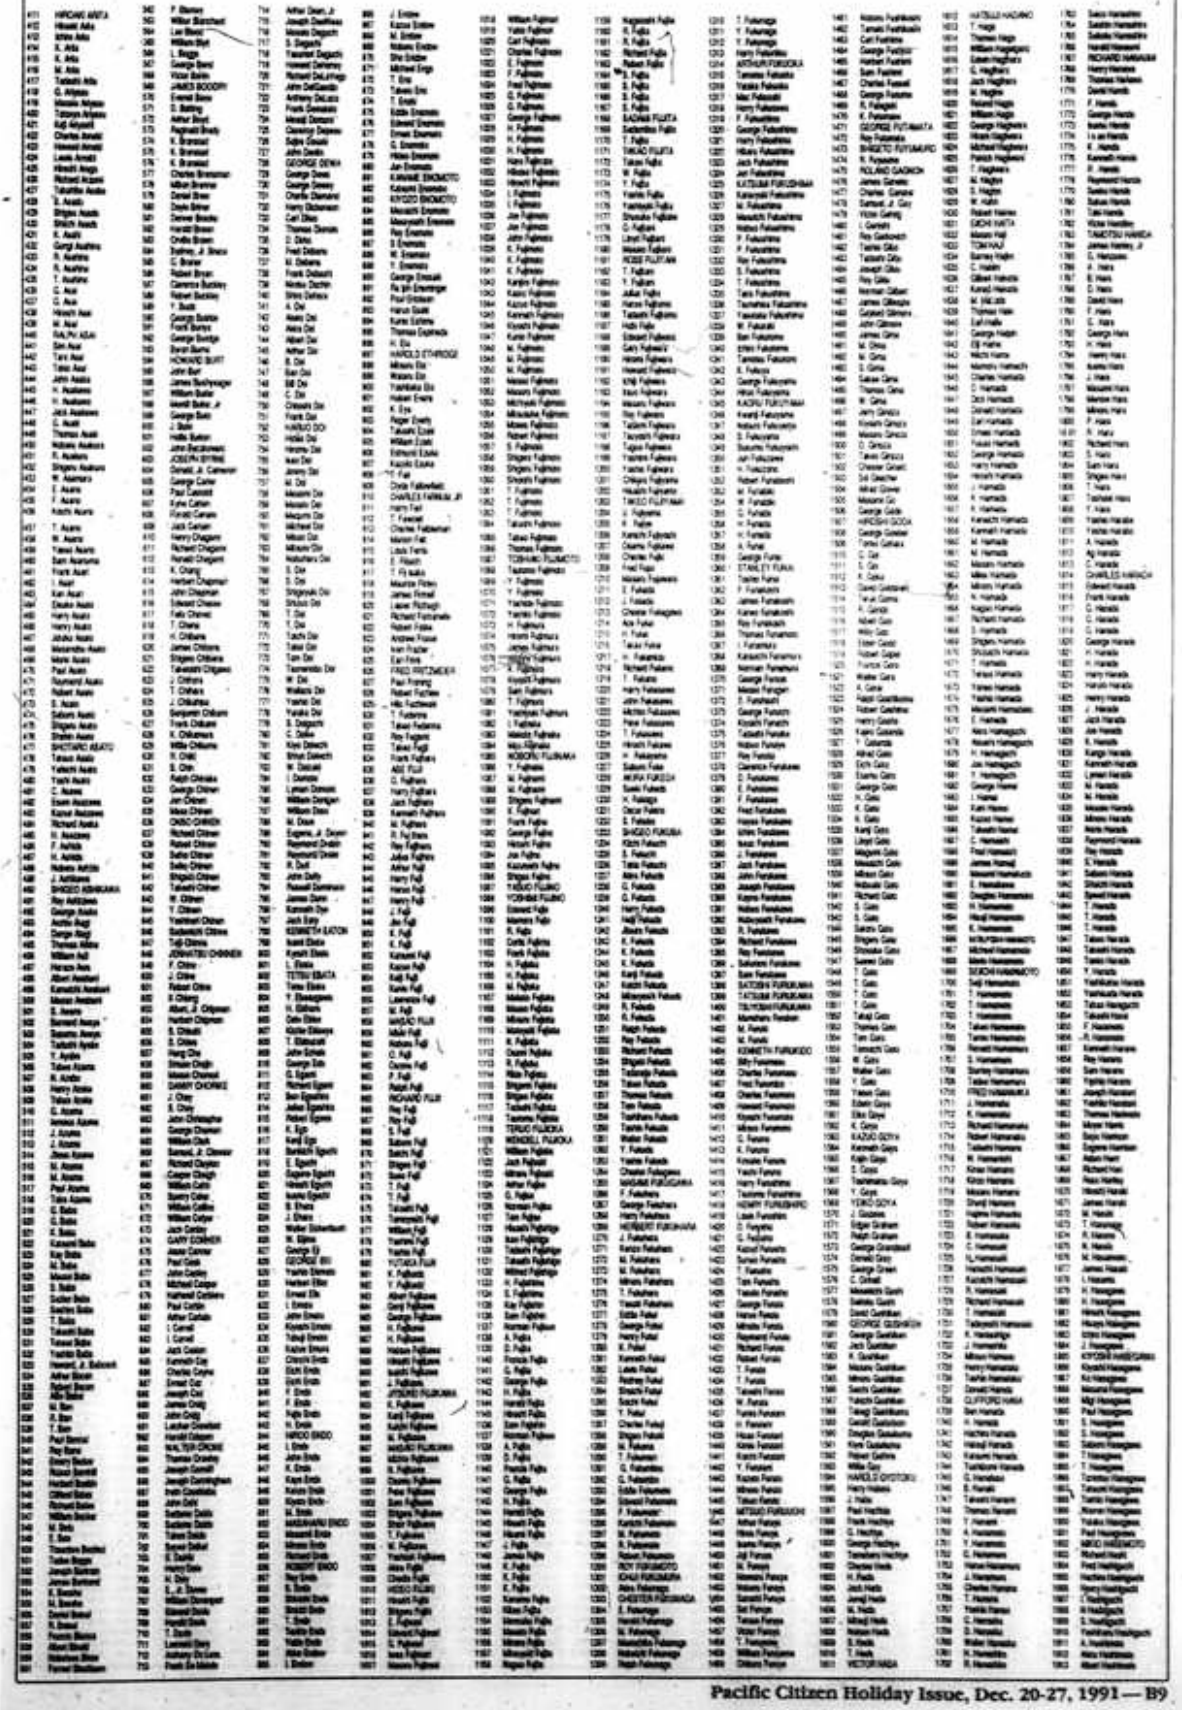

"The honor roll will dramatically remind all Americans of what happened to and was accomplished by Japanese Americans during World War II," Akune said.

What Pearl Harbor brought to the Nikkei of Hawaii

By ALLAN BEEKMAN

Allan Beekman is a longtime Honolulu resident, JACL member, writer, and former newspaperman with the Honolulu Star-Bulletin. He is a frequent Pacific Citizen contributor and the author of The Niihau Incident, the true story of the Japanese fighter pilot who after the Pearl Harbor attack, crash-landed on the Hawaiian Island of Niihau and terrorized the residents, and the soon-to-be-published Crisis: The Japanese Attack on Pearl Harbor and Southeast Asia.

At 3:42 A.M., Dec. 7, 1941, Ensign R.C. McCloy, officer of the deck of the minesweeper Condor, operating off Pearl Harbor, Island of Oahu, Hawaii, about one and three-quarter miles south of the entrance buoys, noticed something about 50 yards off the port bow. He called to quartermaster Second Class R. C. Uttrick and asked his opinion of the object. Uttrick pegred through binoculars and said, "That's a periscope, sir, and there aren't supposed to be any subs in this area."

Thus was ushered in the events of a morning that would bring tragedy to America, double tragedy to the Nikkei and that would unleash powers that would transform the world.

The double tragedy for the Nikkei derived from being identified with the nation about to perpetrate a disastrous attack on Pearl Harbor and the military bases of Oahu. For the submarine sighted was a Japanese midget whose mission was to steal into Pearl Harbor and fire its two torpedoes at American warships there after an attack scheduled for this morning had begun.

The Nikkei tended to be split into two groups, the Issei, immigrant generation, and their Hawaii-born offspring, the Nisei, or second generation. The line of demarcation between the two groups was not always clear. The Issei were barred from citizenship. The Nisei born before 1924 were citizens of both nations unless they had legally expatriated their Japanese citizenship.

After 1924, those born in Hawaii were Japanese citizens only if the parents had so registered them with the Japanese consulate.

A few of the Hawaii-born had been educated in Japan. In language and culture, some of these were more Japanese than anything else.

All were identified as Japanese by the local authorities, the U.S. Census, the press and other mediums of propaganda. Probably it never occurred to any of the Nikkei to deny the identification. The indoctrination to which they had been subjected was too thorough to permit doubt.

How the locally born Nikkei became disfranchised from being American and even from being identified as Hawaiian, derived from peculiarities in the archipelago. The British explorer Capt. James Cook discovered what is now known as Hawaii in 1778. He identified the natives as Indians and named the archipelago the Sandwich Islands in honor of his patron, the Earl of Sandwich.

At the time the islands were disunited, with the chiefs continually warring to gain supremacy. With the introduction of Western arms, one, Kamehameha, from the Island of Hawaii, succeeded in bringing all the islands under his rule.

But the islands over which he came to rule was not the flourishing kingdom of which he may have dreamed. With the introduction of foreign disease and the malaise bred of a foreign economy, the native population rapidly declined.

Finding the islands suitable for the cultivation of sugar, Caucasian foreigners imported different national groups to cultivate the plantations. To discourage these groups from uniting for more pay and better working conditions, the planters fostered national differences among them, housing them in separate sections and paying them on different days.

The Japanese was one such group.

After America annexed Hawaii in 1898, the American flag flew over the islands. The Japanese who had come to labor on the plantations under three-year contracts found the contracts abrogated. They were free to leave the plantations. They could even emigrate to mainland America and many did.

Appalled at the exodus of the laborers on whose sweating backs they had built their fortunes, the planters sought relief by passing a law discouraging recruitment of local labor by mainland agents and fanning the flames of Oriental prejudice on the West Coast of America.

In Hawaii the feudal system remained. With the passage of time the Sandwich Islands had become the Hawaiian Islands, the identification of the aborigines had progressed from Indian to Hawaiian, probably because they had been subjugated by Kamehameha of the Island of Hawaii, the largest island in the archipelago. Their descendants, most of whom were the result of interbreeding with the newer arrivals, were identified as part-Hawaiian.

WAR ROLE—Tadao Fuchikami, as an RCA messenger after the Japanese attack began, carried the warning message of Chief of Staff Gen. George C. Marshall to Lt. Gen. Walter C. Short, commanding general, Hawaiian Department.

The Nikkei, of course, were no-part Hawaiian. And though they were American citizens by virtue of being born beneath the American flag, the authorities enrolled them in the public schools as of Japanese nationality. There Hawaii was depicted to them as a no man's land where only the aborigines might be Hawaiian and only the aborigines and Caucasians might be American. It was an archipelago in which different nationalities lived under a common government, such as Switzerland or the former Austro-Hungarian Empire.

In the world beyond the school grounds, press and radio consistently identified the Nikkei as Japanese. The U.S. Census Bureau followed the same nomenclature. Though on this fateful day of Dec. 7, 1941, only 24 percent of the Nikkei resident in Hawaii were foreign-born, the census had listed all 160,000 of them as Japanese— 37 percent of the total population of Hawaii.

The alien creed of Hawaii was to bear bitter fruit - not only for the Nikkei but for those identified as American who had winked at the savage burlesque of America being carried on here.

The Condor reported its sighting to the destroyer Ward, which began to search for the submarine.

It was no secret that Japan was about to embark on a war that would involve America. The Honolulu Advertiser had carried a headline, JAPS MAY STRIKE OVER WEEKEND. In Washington, the preceding evening, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, had read a message addressed to the Japanese Embassy, which his cryptographers had intercepted and decrypted, that spoke so frankly of Japanese intentions that Roosevelt had turned to his companion, Harry Hopkins, and remarked, "This means war."

Roosevelt also expected Japan to begin the war, in the Japanese tradition, with a surprise attack. But neither he, nor most of the others in the top echelons, expected the surprise attack to come in Hawaii. They expected it to be begun against the British and Dutch in East Asia and possibly against the Philippines.

Lt. Gen. Walter Campbell Short, commanding the Hawaiian Department, having only a superficial knowledge of Hawaii, and presumably taking the Census representations at face value, believed the imminent danger to Hawaii was not enemy attack but sabotage. Expecting a Japanese strike in Southeast Asia and concomitant attempts at sabotage in Hawaii, Short had put his planes out in the open, wing tip to wing tip, where they could be effectively guarded against saboteurs and would be open targets for aerial attackers.

The preceding evening, Lt. Col. George W. Bicknell,

THE MOMENT—Left to right, the U.S.S. West Virginia, the U.S.S. Tennessee, and the U.S.S. Arizona, just after the beginning of the Japanese attack on Dec. 7.

Assistant, G-2 (Intelligence Section), Hawaiian Department, had tried to interest him in a transcript of a lengthy telephone conversation of December 3 between a Japanese newspaperman in Tokyo and Motokazu Mori, husband of Ishiko Mori, the local correspondent for the Tokyo Yomiuri Shimbun.

Bicknell had come with Lt. Kendall J. Fielder, G-2, who lived next door to Short. Both Fielder and Short were on their way to "Ann Etzler's Cabaret" - an annual charity dinner-dance at the Schofield Barracks Officers Club. While their wives waited in the car for them, the three men sat on Short's porch and mulled over the message.

Probably they were ignorant of much of the background of the message. Both of the Moris were physicians. Motokazu was the son of Dr. Iga Mori, whose brother Kosaburo, now in his eighties, was an admiral in the Japanese Imperial Navy. Motokazu had first married Miwo Harada, who died in 1927. He expressed his grief in a 296-page memoir of her.

Miwo's brother, Ken Harada, had been Japanese ambassador to the Vatican and was now chamberlain in the Japanese Imperial Court.

Ishiko, an alien, met Motokazu while doing her internship at the Japanese Hospital in Honolulu. The two married in 1930.

The immigration law of the time required that she must return to Japan every other year and remain there a year before returning to America. In compliance, she made four round trips.

In the meantime she had learned that permanent residence might be hers as a diplomat, missionary, international merchant or newspaper correspondent. In 1934 she went to work for the Yomiuri as its Honolulu correspondent.

The Mori family held status among the Japanese-speaking residents. Though little significant news came her way, she was able to fulfill her duty by submitting society news.

Wednesday, December 3, she received a radiogram from the Yomiuri informing her that a representative would telephone Friday with the hope of talking to influential members of the Japanese community. He would ask, "How are things in Hawaii?"

To cover the assignment, she first went to Consul General Kita. He declined to be interviewed. Presumably because of the tense international situation the others she consulted also declined. Unable to find anyone else for the interview, she shifted the burden to her husband.

The Yomiuri reporter, Ogawa, phoned Friday, December 5. Though the Moris were unaware of the significance of the call, the newspaper was laying the groundwork for a big feature story on Hawaii.

Ogawa said, "I received your telegram and was able to grasp the essential points. I would like to have your impressions on the conditions you are observing at present. Are airplanes flying daily?"

"Yes, lots of them fly around."

Chitchat continued. How many sailors in the Islands? Not so many as at the beginning of the year. What about Japanese-American relations on the Island? They were "getting along harmoniously." What about the U.S. Pacific Fleet? "We try to avoid talking about such matters." "What kind of flowers are in bloom in Hawaii at present?""

"Presently the flowers in bloom are fewest of the whole year. However, the hibiscus and poinsettia are in bloom now."

It was an English translation of this conversation that engaged the attention of Short and Fielder. After 45 minutes discussion they concluded that the message was in order. There was no need to be disturbed about it.

Actually the interview with Mori would be published in the Yomiuri, complete with reference to the flowers mentioned. But with what was to occur on the morning of December 7, coupled with the status of the Moris, the conversation was to take on an undeservedly sinister significance.

The surveillance of Mori was indicative of the climate of suspicion of the time. At a special session of the Hawaii legislature called Sept. 15, 1941, Short had appeared to urge passage of an MD (Major Disaster) bill. The bill, which was passed, gave the governor extraordinary powers to be invoked in case of emergency. The act further gave the governor, or his deputies, power to train guards and air raid wardens, to purchase supplies and to register, fingerprint and immunize the population.

IN CHARGE—Lt. Gen. Walter Campbell Short, commanding the Hawaiian Department and having only a superficial knowledge of Hawaii, and presumably taking the Census representations at face value, believed the imminent danger to Hawaii was not enemy attack but sabotage.

PEARL HARBOR

Most suspect by the local American officials were officers of clearly identified Japanese organizations, such as the Japanese Chamber of Commerce, Japanese language schools, Shinto and Buddhist priests, Japanese consular agents as well as several prominent Nikkei politicians, active union leaders and many commercial fishermen. The Chamber had been urging the Japanese to buy war bonds and to contribute funds for the Japanese war against China.

Army, Navy and FBI were engaged in anti-espionage activity for some time when they were joined in December 1940 by an espionage bureau established by the Honolulu Police Department. Through 1941 the local intelligence agencies compiled lists of persons to be picked up on the outbreak of war and of those to be kept under surveillance. As the investigations proceeded, names were added or removed. By November 1941 all arrangements for internment had been completed, even to rehearsals of the identification of suspects and of their transport to internment centers.

Among other things, Mori was a director of the Hawaii Chuo Gakuin (Japanese Central Institute), the oldest Japanese-language school on Oahu, located across the street from the building in which he practiced medicine, mountainward of the intersection of Vineyard Boulevard and Nuuanu Avenue. As the name of the school implied, this was the center of the Honolulu of that day. Before the advent of the automobile, which eliminated the need for the affluent to reside in proximity to the business district, the elite of Honolulu had lived in this section of Nuuanu Avenue. Evidence of their former residence there was evinced by mansions, surrounded by spacious lawns.

Not only was Hawaii Chuo Gakuin in the center of the Honolulu of that day, it was also the center of the Nikkei community of Hawaii. Many historic and significant meetings had been held in its auditorium. But none had been as dramatic as the one that was to occur there that morning among a special Sunday morning Japanese-language class.

HISTORIC BUILDING—Entrance to a building of the Japanese Central Institute (Chuo Gakuin), at 1464 Nuuanu Avenue, from a 1941 photo. The grounds of the school have been incorporated into Foster Botanic Garden, forming its Vineyard-Nuuanu corner. The building has been demolished. The gold trees, shown flanking the entrance, remain.

On the eve of the attack, these mansions had been diverted to other purposes. Mori practiced from one, though he lived elsewhere. The one adjoining Hawaii Chuo Gakuin, had been converted to a mortuary owned by the Hosoi family.

The school itself was a focal point of the xenophobia prevailing in the community. After WW I, this xenophobia had taken form as a move to regulate the Japanese language schools with the ultimate aim of abolishing them. Some of the language schools had united to fight this movement through the courts. Ultimately the case went to the U.S. Supreme Court, which ruled in favor of the language schools.

Not only was Hawaii Chuo Gakuin in the center of the Honolulu of that day, it was also the center of the Nikkei community of Hawaii. Many historic and significant meetings had been held in its auditorium. But none had been as dramatic as the one that was to occur there that morning among a special Sunday morning Japanese-language class.

Elsewhere, though few realized it, matters were approaching crisis. The submarine sighted by the Condor was one of five midgets, launched from larger, so-called "I" class submarines.

The mission of each midget submarine was to steal into Pearl Harbor and, after the scheduled 8 A.M. attack began, to launch its two torpedoes at the warships anchored there.

The Condor alerted the nearby destroyer Ward to the presence of the submarine. The Ward searched for the submarine, found and sank it. Then it found another and sank that.

The Ward also found a sampan within the prohibited area and chased after it. As it drew near, a fisherman aboard the sampan waved a white flag.

Lt. William W. Outerbridge, captain of the Ward, thought the sampan signal odd, though he thought it might have been at least partly inspired by the explosion of the depth bombs he had released on the submarines.

He reported the sighting of the sampan. He had also promptly reported the sinking of the submarines, the report being mired in the complacency of the time.

Actually the largest naval task force ever assembled up to that date was bearing towards Oahu. It included six airplane carriers of whose locations Kimmel's Intelligence unit had lost track. December 2, Comdr. Joseph J. Rochefort reported that the commands of neither Carrier Division One nor Two had appeared in traffic for 15 and possibly 25 days.

Kimmel demanded, referring to a Honolulu landmark, "Do you mean to say that they could be rounding Diamond Head and you wouldn't know it?"

Actually the carriers would launch their planes 220 miles north of Diamond Head, beginning at 6:00 A.M. At 6:15, 183 planes - fighters, bombers and torpedo planes - the first wave of the attack- set course due south for Oahu.

Through a botched coordination plan, the Japanese attack on Southeast Asia, supposed to follow the Pearl Harbor attack to decrease the likelihood of putting the Pearl Harbor defenders on the alert, had already begun. The leader of the Japanese flight, Comdr. Mitsuo Fuchida, knew nothing of this premature tipping of his hand, but he still did not expect to achieve surprise. Instead he expected that the Americans would have been alerted and that he would lose half of his planes.

The 43 fighter planes in the group were assigned to achieve aerial supremacy so that the bombers could fulfill their mission without enemy interference.

At this hour Tadao Fuchikami, destined for a role in the morning events, was preparing for his 7:30 A.M. appearance at the RCA office on South King Street, near the Civic Center of Honolulu. His role was to derive from a tortuous chain of events that had begun when the Intelligence in Washington had decrypted and translated the final part of the note that had caused Roosevelt, the preceding evening, to declare, "This means war."

The final part instructed the Japanese envoys to deliver the message breaking off diplomatic relations at 1 P.M.

Pacific Citizen & the Association of Asian Pacific American Artists announce winners of the national

1991 SHORT STORY CONTEST

Pacific Citizen and the Association of Asian Pacific American Artists (AAPA), a non-profit organization committed to promoting the realistic and balanced portrayals of Asian Pacific Americans in all aspects of art and entertainment, created this national short story contest to encourage and support works by Asian Pacific American writers and aspiring writers. Nearly 70 works from authors around the country were reviewed by distinguished judges chosen by PC and AAPA—Velina Hasu Houston, an award-winning playwright who is currently writing a play based on the life of Tokyo Rose; David Mura of St. Paul, Minn., who recently received acclaim for his book, 'Turning Japanese'; V V Dachin Hsu, a Hong Kong-born stage artist, photographer, and film director, currently working on 'White Ashes'; Ko Won, Korean American poet, author-translator, and UC, Riverside, professor, and editor of 'The AA Literary Realm' and David Palumbo-Liu, assistant professor of comparative literature at Stanford University, who recently published his first book on 12th-century classical Chinese poetry. Prizes, provided by AAPA, Pacific Citizen, and Dutton's Brentwood Bookstore of Los Angeles, are: first place, $500; second place, $250; third place, $100.

This first short story national contest was conceived and coordinated by Martha Nakagawa, an AAPAA board of directors member and a contributing PC writer in the arts field.

1st place

Vacancy

By Thelma Seto

Thelma Seto, 37, a Venice, Calif., professional writer, has been published in the Rafu Shimpo, Amerasia Journal, Sinister Wisdom, the Portland Review, Weatherbird, and Bridge, primarily for her poetry. She is a member of Pacific Asian American Women's Writers West. She was born and raised in Syria, and attended Antioch College in Ohio.

The stucco motel looked like a pink sugar cube melting as raindrops on the outside of the car window ran down the glass. A welcome sign blinked on and off in its brightly-lit office window. Above the door hung a smaller sign with a word "Office" painted in neat, white, block letters. A larger neon sign hung above that, blinking "Vacancy" in fancy, green script to the night. The "No" portion of the sign was invisible, like a new moon.

"Go on," said my mother, as soon as my father had turned the key in the ignition and set the parking brake. "People are people. Maybe these folks have children." She glanced briefly at my brother and I wrapped in blankets in the back seat and at the baby she was breast-feeding. Her eyebrows furrowed fleetingly but she set her face pleasantly as she turned to my father again and smiled. She was a stubborn optimist. She placed two fingers lightly on his elbow and squeezed. I could see Dad wince, but he didn't jerk away or say anything.

Dad hunched over the steering wheel like a defeated boxer. He took his eyeglasses off and placed them gingerly on the dashboard. He took the white handkerchief out of the breast pocket of his black suit without touching the pocket itself. Careful, meticulous, like a Japanese businessman. He unfolded the handkerchief, pressed the creases out against the steering wheel, and wiped both his eyes with it. Then he folded it once and he wiped each lens of his eyeglasses. Before putting them back on the bridge of his nose, he wiped his brow. Despite the downpour outside and the chill creeping in the car vents, he was perspiring.

I was shivering. The blanket wrapped around me didn't help. The car heater spewed a thin, lukewarm stream of cool air halfheartedly down our necks and around our feet. I hated sitting in the back seat.

Dad sighed. He buttoned his mackintosh and put on his hat. Reaching under the dashboard, he pulled his rubbers on over his shoes, staring blankly at the "Vacancy" sign as he concentrated on what his fingers were doing. He sighed again, refolded his handkerchief, and stuck it back into his breast pocket. He was very particular about handkerchiefs. Some kids got underwear every year for Christmas; we got handkerchiefs.

As he heaved out of the car, although he was not a big man, the car lurched from side to side. I listened to the rain pelting down on the roof of the car and the sounds of his footsteps in the pink gravel on the walk.

He went into the office and shut the screen door, then took off his hat with civility and pressed his finger on the little round brass bell on the counter. I couldn't hear the bell ring. None of the noises inside the office leaked outdoors. All I could hear was the rain and the wind and the sucking noises of the baby. I watched Dad proudly, though. He was a perfect gentleman, not a hair out of place, with a perfect clipped British accent, speaking impeccable King's English, and with beautiful manners so as not to offend. Anyone. A son any Japanese immigrant would be proud of.

A man in shirt sleeves came out from the back room. His pate shone in the overhead light. My father's jet-black hair shone too, but not in the same way. My father said something, politely holding his hat horizontally in his hands in front of his chest. It looked like manners, but I knew he was hiding his heart.

Winter Befalls the Garden

By Sandra Mizumoto Posey

Sandra Mizumoto Posey, 24, is a former Nisei Week queen. She attended Cal State University, Long Beach, majoring in comparative literature with emphasis on Japanese and Asian Studies.

"This is difficult, the doctor said, "and very personal. I am concerned about the mental health of both of you." Mother stared at the brown vinyl chaise lounge in the corner. I stared back at the doctor. "Me too," I said.

He continued, "It's a decision for the family to make, but I would recommend placing your father in a nursing home. No one ever wants to do it, but it is sometimes necessary, for the sake of the family as a whole."

Mother still stared at the chaise. I became her voice. I knew what she would say if she could. "He's been in a steady decline for some time now. He can barely walk, he's lost control of his bladder and bowel movements. There is stomach acid leaking out where he is connected to his 24-hour liquid feeding unit. The acid eats away at the skin upon his stomach." I took a deep breath. "We don't feel he has much time left and if that's the case we want to be with him to take care of him. He's taken care of us for so many years, this is all we have to give back to him. Sure, we're exhausted and depressed, but I think we can handle it."

Mother has a martyr complex. She is as good a kamikaze as there ever was. Self-sacrifice is rule number one. Ingrained in us from day-one through the pain of childbirth we knew that to give of ourselves regardless of cost was the highest virtue. Guilt is rule number two. Guilt for what you have not done, guilt for what you could not do. Guilt is a vulture in our house, circling overhead and below us keeping us wary and in line ever awake. It would just as well eat us alive as dead but waits nonetheless until the searing sun saps our energy, leaving us prone and helpless.

"Patients in your father's condition," the doctor said, could go on like this for five years, maybe more. I am not sure you could handle that. The role of caregiver is a draining one. However, let's say you are right and your father doesn't have that much time left. If so, and he continues to decline you and your mother are not capable of physically handling the load. I am concerned that your father will drag both of you down with him."

Mother looked up and spoke for the first time, "We put Daddy in nursing home and I just sit at home do nothing. I can't live with myself."

The doctor looked at her resigned expression, then at me. "As I said it's ultimately up to the family to make that decision, I can only advise. "ll I'll prescribe an anti-depressant, Prozac, for your father. Perhaps if he becomes more coherent the load will be a bit lighter."

"Could we have a six-pack of that for the whole family?" I asked.

The doctor smiled . "I don' t think it's time for that just yet."

The telephone has become my therapist. Talking to friends has become like phone sex on a 976 number: they are seldom seen and the gratification is as temporary as the call. As soon as I hang up I am alone again. I am never not alone.

Mother complains about the phone bill and I cannot pay her. I don't work because I must be available to help out. Taking Father to a doctor's appointment is a two-person job. I find I have trouble explaining my lack of employment to acquaintances and casual friends. What do they mean when they say, "How are you?"

In language classes the answer to "How are you?" is always "Fine." It's always the same whether it is Chinese, Japanese, or anything else. They never teach you to respond with "I feel like S-----t. Nothing is going right. My world is falling apart."

Last year I graduated from college. Swept up with joy and relief I went to out to celebrate. When I returned home the phone was ringing. It was Mother. "Daddy is blue," she said, "stop breathing." In a panic I rushed to the hospital. There, I found found out that my mother had not said "stop breathing" but "start bleeding." I also found out that in Japan when someone is pale they call it "blue" rather than "white." Nonetheless the reality was stark.

Just before I left Father urinated blood into the toilet bowl. He waited until I was gone to tell Mother because he didn't want to ruin my evening. It was a bleeding ulcer and he was put in Intensive Care. When they went in to fix the ulcer they found a small bit of stomach cancer. Going in for the cancer they found the ulcer surgery had created an obstacle course of scar tissue. Surgery was further complicated by the discovery that Father's blood type was a rare strain in insufficient supply. During the second surgery on the tumor Father suffered a stroke. His right side was mostly paralyzed. His face fell limp on one side, his right leg still had some movement but his right hand was virtually dead. Worst of all his swallowing mechanism no longer worked and he could not eat or drink anything by mouth. In the year since, he's had a couple of bouts with pneumonia, and several incidences of skin cancer that appearedlike mold on bread: once they came they kept coming. In all, it became the equation for turning a jovial, joking chatterbox of a man, the essence of Southern hospitality, into a barely-conscious, unresponsive tragedy.

When we wheeled Father into the doctor's office today the first thing I noticed was the standard chaise lounge that occupied the far corner of the room. It was made of brown vinyl

Norma Jean

Lee Betchley, 29, is an actress who began her writing career last year. She attended Cal State, Los Angeles, where she studied writing. She resides in Encino,Calif.

I'm watching her dress in an indistinct brown uniform and rehearse lines from a Denny's training manual. Make-up purchased at the local Thrifty's. She selects whatever is on sale; strawberry sensation lip gloss, mulled wine eye shadow, peach blush and waterproof mascara. She pulls her pallid hair back with an old rubber band. She used to style it like Marilyn Monroe when she worked as a female boxer. She would lip sync to "Diamonds Are A Girl's Best Friend" while stripping down to a red corset with pearls sewn on by a Chinese woman.

She still tries to emulate Norma Jean but her body is too masculine. She has learned to like coffee and generic cigarettes. I watch her right thumb ignite a flame from a white cigarette lighter given to her by the owner of the "Six Happiness" restaurant in Hong Kong. We had dinner there with Robert. He was an American who had been living on the island for two years. He saw one of the boxing shows and invited us to several lunches and dinners.

Later he took us to the "underground city" and Club NinetySeven in Lan Kwai Fong. She stayed inside to dance while we walked along the street to smell the night. It smelled of dumplings and a touch of history. It inspired me. There were two moons and the breezes felt like chiffon whispering. I swallowed the air and it made me vulnerable. We pressed our bodies together without using our hands. He slid down to a kneeling position.

And when he came up I was soft and light. When you are in a foreign country it is necessary to fall in love.

He escorted us on the ferry and when we reached the Kowloon side he called a cab. He took my mouth and tasted it like a whore. The gentleness was gone. He said good night. Didn't give us money for the cab.

I wanted him to miss me but I knew he wouldn't. Men don't know how to miss a woman because they are frightened. They can't see that there is beauty in pain. They avoid danger. And while you serve a purpose for their pleasure they are completely yours. Offering their blood and possessions. But if danger comes to them, they turn from you. Love is only an obligation to them. Something lost on every occasion where their own interests are concerned. Women suffer because they know how to miss. And when a woman knows she is unnecessary, the world bleeds.

The next morning Norma Jean suggested we find a clinic to get some "morning after pills." It was two hours before we were supposed to be at the coliseum to perform the wrestling and boxing show. After we had to walk eleven blocks so she could find the woman who was selling pearls and would sew them on for twenty five American dollars. The master of ceremonies told the boxing girls that Peter Ip, the coliseum owner's son, was interested in marrying an American in order to leave Hong Kong by 1997. He was willing to pay $10,000. She expected to get his attention. But he left with his Chinese girlfriend to have sushi and we took the subway. On the way back she said she preferred Japanese men, thought Hong Kong smelled like rotting papayas, hated the spaghetti at the Pizza Hut across the street from the hotel, thought the cab drivers were pretending they couldn't speak English and had to get her palm read by an Asian before we left.

That night we laughed about the prostitute who smelled our hair, made a list of thirty things we would never do for a man and talked about leaving the business to become genuine actresses. She told me she had been boxing for five years. Before she was a mud wrestler at Summers in Florida. She started at seventeen. Her stepfather told her mother to choose between himself and her daughter. A week later three suitcases were left on the front porch. Her mother asked her to please stay away.

She stripped for five months to pay off a loan for her breast augmentation. Three thousand dollars and the doctors could only stretch her out to a B cup. A club owner gave her the money in exchange she would dance for tips only. Perverted blue collar husbands with children at

The man in shirt sleeves scowled, said something, and shrugged casually. Then he smiled at Dad. It wasn't a kind smile.

I could see Dad's shoulder blades rise a little. This meant things were not going we'll inside the office. The insides of my stomach braced themselves. Dad gestured to the "Vacancy" sign outside. The two men turned for a moment to look at it. As it blinked on, their two faces, the one Caucasian and the other Japanese, both turned green. When it turned off their faces resumed their ordinary skin tones. They both looked funny green, I thought. But I didn't laugh. I was too chilly and wet and tired, and I felt far, far away from this little scene playing itself out on the stage of a motel office before me. I barely knew this man I called Daddy. He looked like someone from another country — maybe England. Maybe he would fit in there. He didn't fit in, in America, that was for sure .

The motel manager seemed to agree with me, for he shook his head angrily this time, gestured to the door with his rolled up paper, and glared at Dad, his thin lips disappearing in on themselves. Dad turned to go. His face was red. My stomach turned inside out.

When he got back into the car, it lurched again under his weight. Mother looked at him inquiringly. He didn't say anything but turned the key in the ignition, and pushed his foot all the way down on the gas pedal. The car wheels screeched as he steered back into the road.

"Barbarian !" he said under his breath.

Mom touched his elbow again, but this time she let her eyebrows furrow. The silence was heavy, full of lead, of concrete. My brother, who had been slumped beside me, came to life.

"I'm hungry," he said. "When are we going to eat?"

"That's enough," growled Dad.

"All I said was I'm hungry," said Luke . "Dad gum, we haven't eaten in hours. When are we going to stop anyway?"

"Oh, for Pete's sake," hissed Dad . The back of his neck and his ears turned deep red. I shot Luke a warning but he was ignoring me . He of ten ignored me because I was a girl. A sly smile spread across the lower part of his face. My father turned to look at him and Luke's sly smile was instantly replaced by his cherubic, innocent, wide-eyed mask.

"How come we didn't stop at that motel?" asked Luke. The silence lowered itself again like a dumb animal. He turned in his seat and craned his neck to see out the window at the little pink motel, fast disappearing in the distance. "It said there was a vacancy."

"Too dirty," said Dad. "And too expensive. We'd better just spend the night in the car."

"Yes!" said Mother in a loud, cheerful voice. "That would be fun! Like camping out!"

"In the rain!" said Luke. He gave me a look which said, Can you believe these guys? Which I ignored. He grimaced in disgust. "Gol durn," he said loudly.

"And the first thing I'll do when we stop is wash your mouth out with soap, young man," said Dad.

"But I didn't swear," said Luke.

"Not in fact," said Dad, "but in spirit."

Luke studied the back of our father's neck for awhile. Then he said, "Well, the least you could do is feed me first. I'm starved."

Let it up, I thought, staring at the ceiling.

"Young man..." began Dad.

"Now, Bob," said Mother, putting her hand on his elbow again.

"Now nothing," he growled. "Don't you Now Bob me!"

She shut her mouth quickly and took the baby off her breast. She stared out the window, hard. The baby's head lolled back like it was dead. But it wasn't. Soft little breaths issued forth from its nose like puffs of smoke in the chilly air.

"If I can't have a place to lay my head, at least you could buy me a hamburger," said my brother. His ears were also red by now.

I concentrated on breathing as deeply as I could and watching the bushes whip by out the window. I hated these fights. They filled me with dread. One of these days one of them was going to kill the other, or else the one who was angriest was going to pop wide open and there'd be a mess of blood and guts and undigested food for us females to clean up. And it had better not be Dad because neither Luke nor I knew how to drive or was big enough to reach the pedals. Our nightmares were full of scenes of runaway cars, not knowing where the brake pedal was, or not being able to reach it. And just sitting in the driver's seat scared our mother half to death.

"You don't deserve a hamburger," said Dad. He pulled over to the side of the road suddenly and stopped the engine. There was more silence, only this one was full of something ominous. I held my breath and watched the lights glint softly in my mother's hair. Mostly auburn, but some red and copper and gold, too. She had been an attractive woman. Before she had us. Before she married Dad. Before she got so tired.

Dad got out of the car, walked around to the back.

"What is he doing?" asked Luke in a whisper, suddenly afraid.

I snuck a glance over my shoulder to the back of the station wagon at Dad, afraid I'd see him taking his belt out of its loops around the waist of his pants. He was rummaging around in the paper bag of picnic things. He took out a table knife, a loaf of bread, a jar of generic peanut butter. Then he walked quickly back to Luke's window and tapped on it.

"Open up!" He sounded angry.

Luke slowly rolled his window down, took the sandwich fixings which Dad thrust into his hands, and slowly rolled the window up again.

Dad came around to the driver's seat, got in, and started the ignition again.

No one said anything.

Luke took out two pieces of spongy white bread, slowly unscrewed the lid to the peanut butter, and began spreading a large gob of the brown stuff onto his bread.

Peanut butter was a treat reserved for long-distance travelling, but tears were forming in the corner of Luke's eyes. And soon, one slid down the side of his nose and hung there, suspended. Like that little green "Vacancy" sign, banging in the wind.

We didn't camp out that night. Just kept driving into the pocket of empty space fifteen feet in front of the car's grill, formed by the headlights cutting into the night, putting as much distance as we could between us and that unsuitable pink motel.

NORMA

home would drink long necks and yell "show us your pussy, you whore." And after every show there were the pictures. She hated New York, Philidelphia and Chicago. For eighty dollars a lawyer stuck a tootsie roll up her ass and said "Make it look like you're doing it in my mouth." But she felt sorry for the Vietnam vet who sat in his wheelchair on the front row. His left arm holding his jacket and a copy of "The Treasury of American Poetry." His right hand unzipped his pants and he would masturbate. She did him for free because he had no legs. She pleaded with the owner to let her go after twenty-one weeks.

As I listened to her describe her past, I thought of the woman who was in a coma for two months. When she came to she thought she had fallen in love and gotten married. It was a disturbing realization, but perhaps not for the first time. We have no control over life. No matter how hard we try, it's never enough. And when something good occurs, we wake up to find it never really happened. Being happy is just an illusion.

She told me she didn't want to dance so she got married. His mother ran a casino in Las Vegas. He never had to work. He was devoted to sex. He craved for any fragment of it. If a woman wanted oral sex he would ecstatically oblige. And when he anticipated a full session he would flush with enthusiasm. He had to know when was the last time his friends had sex and did they know anyone who would give him head. He carried a polaroid of himself and a topless blonde laying on a bed. On the bottom the blonde wrote "Why do the ugliest men make the best lovers? " He was blatant about his sexual encounters and would describe them in extensive detail to his wife. And when she cried, he slapped her. She always hit him back and he always laughed. Two hours later he would apologize.

For their first anniversary he purchased a three inch dog collar and a short leash.

"We don't have a dog." She said.

"It's for you."

She found him with another woman in the rotating bar above his mother's casino. He was kissing the woman when the beer bottle hit his skull. It took thirty six stitches to close the wound. Three days later he filed a law suit and for a divorce. He moved to Los Angeles, married a nineteen year old French girl who doesn't speak English and has breakfast with actors who haven't worked since 1967 every Monday at Silver Spoons on Santa Monica Boulevard.

"I feel smaller" she said laying in the full size bed parallel to mine. I watched the pulsating red glow on the ceiling from the Inter-Continental Plaza sign across from the Park hotel.

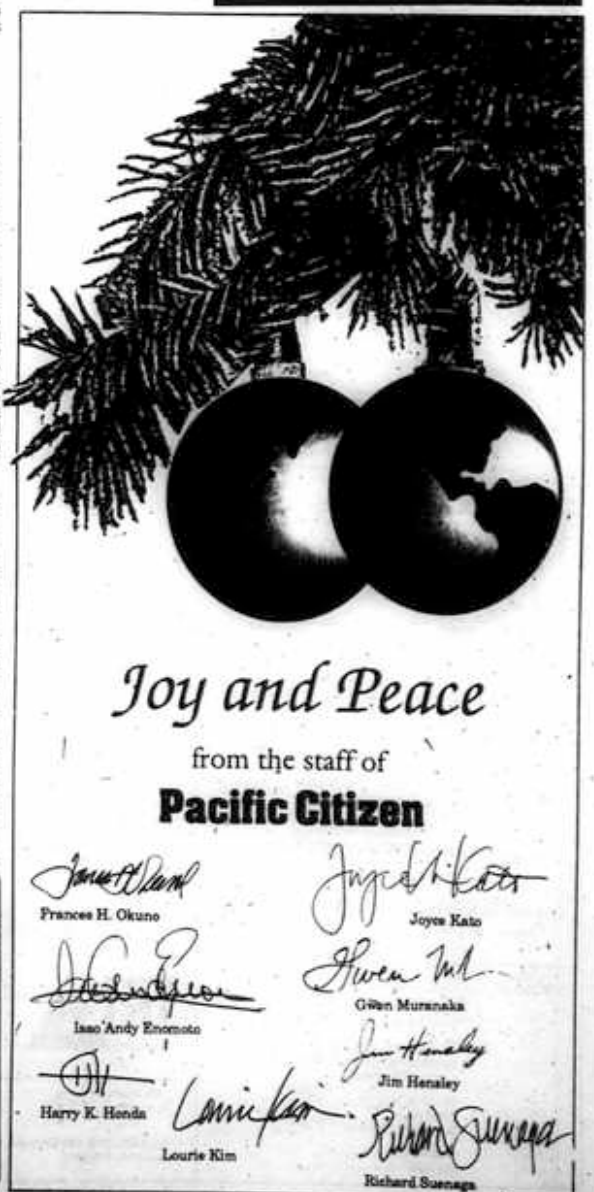

"I'm not going to do anything sleazy anymore." She leaned toward me on her right arm.

"Let's promise not to do anything sleazy." She waited for a response. It never came.

Today, I'm looking at the sixty-four inch black and white poster of Marilyn dressed in a black corset with fishnets, standing with her legs spread and her hands

One P.M. in Washington would be 7:30 A.M. in Hawaii, a time when the crews at Pearl Harbor would be at breakfast and the ships most defenseless. After delay on delay, this message finally found its way into the hands of Chief of Staff Gen. George C. Marshall, who leisurely read through it and, finding that all present concurred that the hour mentioned indicated an attack in the Pacific at the same time, decided to alert those concerned, of which the Hawaii command would be one.

The telegram went out at about 11:58 Washington time while the Japanese planes were already on their way to Oahu. The flight would be detected by radar operators at Kaena Point, who reported it. An inexperienced officer, who received the call, thought the radar operators must have detected an expected American flight coming from the mainland. He told them not to worry about it.

To the surprise and joy of Fuchida, when he arrived over Oahu, he learned that he had achieved surprise. There was not an American fighter in the air to resist him. And the situation at Pearl Harbor seemed to represent almost incredible good luck. Except for the missing American carriers, the ships were moored close together.

While the class was singing Usagi no Dansu (Bunny Dance), an anti-aircraft shell fell in the yard, exploded and sent fragments into the auditorium. One fragment tore through the left wrist of Yoichi Sakai, 6, at the joint, leaving a hole. Another fragment wounded Masako Arakaki, also 6.

David Kiyoshi Teragawachi, 40, son of Usaku Teragawachi, the photographer noted for his recording of an earlier generation, and himself a jeweler, watchmaker and director of Hawaii Chuo Gakuin, had learned of the attack and had come to collect his daughter, Yoko, 8. As he entered the ground floor, the fragments of the exploding anti-aircraft shell had passed over his head and into the auditorium. The shattered glass it had caused was to pepper his daughter's face with particles.

Seeking escape, the shrieking children ran down the glass-littered steps and fled for home. Teragawachi went into the auditorium. Finding the wounded girl, he tried to assist her. They took her across the street to the office of Motokazu Mori. He was not there. High on the suspect list anyway, coupled with his phone call of December 2, he, his wife and son were promptly picked up when the attack began. One wonders if Masako might have been saved had Mori been there.

Herman Hosoi came to help. In Hosoi's car, they took Masako to Queen's Hospital. She died in Honda's arms on the way.

They also took Yoichi to Queen's. Queen's being swamped with wounded and he not being of their district, it refused to receive him. They took him to the Japanese Hospital. There two doctors took care of him immediately but found it necessary to amputate above the wrist.

Sawajiro Ozaki, president of the board of directors, came and told those present, with a grave air, "A terrible thing has happened."

He went his way. Soon he and all the alien board members, as well as the male teachers, would be interned, these teachers likewise being aliens.

Yoneto Hirasaki fled to his grandmother's saimin stand, the Cherry Blossom, at the corner of Liliha and Kukui Streets, where his mother, worked, her home being nearby. He told what had happened at Chuo Gakuin.

Though the Japanese attackers departed at 10, the attacked continued to fire - now at planes from the carrier Enterprise returning to Ford Island, Pearl Harbor and the planes arriving from the mainland. And still they continued to fire defective anti-aircraft shells.

Just as Kikuyo was about to place a pot of rice on the

See PEARL/page B57)

A suggestion to intern the Nikkei on the Island of Molokai came to nothing. They were needed in the war effort. Nevertheless, in the armed camp of Oahu, where so many of them were employed, they were required to wear a badge marked RESTRICTED, reminiscent of the Star of David that Jews and alleged Jews were required to wear in Europe to mark them for discrimination.

The attack began at 7:55 A.M. at Hickam and Wheeler Field Air Bases. At 7:58 torpedo bombers attacked the ships at Pearl Harbor. About 8:03, Fuchikami, along with other telegrams he was to deliver, picked up the one for Gen. Short, Fort Shafter. Fuchikami had the Kalihi district, which includes Fort Shafter on its outskirt, with Pearl Harbor a few miles beyond. When he reached the King Street Fish Market, near Aala Park, he could see smoke rising from Pearl Harbor.

A report was already out that Pearl Harbor was being attacked. Neither he nor the shoppers believed it. The shoppers calmly continued making purchases. But when, astride his motorcycle, Fuchikami went on a little farther, he saw a Japanese fighter plane pursuing and firing on an American plane. He no longer doubted; notwithstanding he continued with his duties, though ignorant of the significance of the telegram addressed to Fort Shafter.

Having achieved astonishing success, the first wave of Japanese planes broke off its attack about 8:30. Just about the time the attack was broken off, Take Okawa emerged from her home on Kauluhikai Lane, near the Japanese Hospital. The preceding day American fliers had carried on extensive maneuvers over Hawaii Chuo Gakuin, where she was a teacher, and provoked fears that they might crash on it. So though she had noticed the firing coming from Pearl Harbor she attributed no significance to it.

In the lull between the breaking off of the first wave of attack and the beginning of the second, she walked down Kisakini Street and turned right into Nuuanu, passing the Japanese Consulate.

The consulate, though she was unaware of it, had been carrying on espionage that had helped the attackers. The members, already aware of the attack, were busily burning papers.

She turned into school yard about the time the second wave of the attack began. Despite the beating they had suffered from the first attack, the defenders were now better prepared and puffs from their anti-aircraft shells filled the sky as the high-level bombers came to drop their bombs.

This phenomena, so different from the usual, frightened the children. As speedily as possible she assembled them in the auditorium, where she supposed they might be safer. There assisted by two male teachers, Hiroshi Honda and Mr. Nakagawa she led them in the singing of children's songs.

The explosions drew nearer. Some of the defenders may have forgotten to defuse their anti-aircraft shells, or the shells might have been defective. Instead of exploding in the air among the attacking planes, they went on to Honolulu, fell on it and exploded, injuring and killing people, most of them Nikkei.

ANSWERING THE CALL—Jack Mizuha, as 1st Lt. Mizuha and executive officer of Burns Field, Island of Kauai, learned that a Japanese pilot, aided by a Nisei, was terrorizing the neighboring island of Niihau. He volunteered to lead a rescue expedition.

was pictured as a Japanese move to control the Amazon basin with native Indians as possible fifth-column allies."

As the threat of war loomed in Europe, the 1938 Pan American Conference in Lima stressed hemispheric solidarity to including periodic reports by the American embassies of totalitarian activities. The U.S. Embassy in Lima began submitting detailed Japanese coverage."

The Riots of May 13,1940

On Saturday, May 11, while the senate debated the so-called Japanese problem, wild rumors circulated in Lima that the Japanese had smuggled in arms and guns - like thousands of rifles were found on a Japanese farm and 8,000 machine guns were uncovered in a Japanese flower shop and that these were to be used by a fifth- column composed of some 5,000 Japanese ex-soldiers in Lima and other towns.

On Monday, May 13, enflamed by these rumors, rioting Peruvians plundered about 600 Japanese homes, schools, farms and businesses in Lima and Callao. No one was killed, but many were injured — mostly Peruvians.[10] Peru hurriedly suspended temporarily the entry of Japanese immigrants while the government was counting its population (nearly 6 million Peruvians, and including 18,000 Japanese); revoked the citizenship of native-born Peruvian Nisei (if they go to Japan for education or other purposes);[11] and required newspapers using non-Latin alphabet to carry parallel translations, a move that strangled the Japanese vernaculars.

The U.S. posted FBI agents in Peru to gather "non-military intelligence" in 1941. As in the U.S., FBI Director Edgar J. Hoover also saw no need to evacuate and detain Japanese in Peru. Hoover expressed confidence in the Manuel Prado administration's appraisal of the Axis situation in Peru, while Victor Raul Haya de la Torre of the out-of-favor APRA party insisted that all the Japanese in Peru had served in the Japanese army, that many were ex-officers, and the Japanese community had only a few women (the 1940 population ratio was 2 male to 1 female).

The government's assessment said there were very few Japanese reserve army of officers (Emmerson of the U.S. Embassy in Lima at the time reports such stories "were never verified"), that the men left Japan as impoverished sons of farmers but omitted stating 40% of the Japanese community was comprised of women and children. That omission only exaggerated the fears of U.S. officials in both Lima and Washington, Gardiner pointed out. As stated at the outset, some 2,000 Japanese Peruvians were arrested, shipped and detained in the United States during World War II.

The 1942 Pan American Conference in Rio accelerated the pace of cooperation. Peru broke diplomatic relations with Japan on Jan. 24, 1942. The U.S. was permitted to build an airbase in Talara, which was returned to Peru after the war. Peru did not declare war with Japan until 1945.[9]

In summarizing Japanese Peruvian history to 1942, Prof. Gardiner concludes that "prewar conclusions of American intelligence regarding the Japanese in Peru rested on an exceedingly fragile factual basis, and the lack of linguistically competent personnel sustained rumors that heightened the emotionalism that went hand in hand with ignorance, prejudice, fears and hate."[12]

Postwar Picture

Gleanings from Amelia Morimoto's paper delivered at a 1982 UNESCO seminar recounts Japanese Peruvian history after World War II.[14]

In 1947, many of the anti-Japanese restrictions were repealed. Some of the deportees who were interned in the U.S. (Crystal City and Seagoville, Texas) were allowed to return.[15]

Social and sports groups were reactivated early. And many sent relief packages and old clothes to Japan and Okinawa.

Immigration was finally restored for Japanese in December, 1960, with an annual quota of 150, but now limited to direct family members.

With Japanese Peruvians recuperating business wise and with reopening of immigration, the 1960s were also the time that Nisei came of age, many finishing college and entering the professions, services and commerce. Activities of Japanese in Peru were diversifying. One notable addition was the Japanese growing of grapes and wine-making. About a third each of the Japanese Peruvian male population was either farming, in industry or the communications field.

To some extent, then, the image of Japanese perceived by the Latin American elite and the masses has changed with the increasing presence of Japanese, especially corporations from Japan in the 1970s and 1980s. Writing in the academic journal, Latin American Studies / Ibaten Amerika Kenkyu (University of Tsukuba, 6.1983), Fumio Nakaga and Iyo Kunimoto, postwar Japan scholars on Mexico and South America, have noted Japan's participation in gigantic development projects in Latin America.

Nakagawa notes Japanese corporations would have been "more modest if they had not found the immigrants and their descendants, at all levels, to be willing collaborators."

In the 1980 census, 80,000 persons of Japanese ancestry were tallied; 95% of them living in the Lima-Callao area. Average age: up to 14 (50%).

The new social phenomenon of the '90s: "dekasegi" — the thousands of Nikkei going to Japan to work. Reports of abuse by agents have begun to appear.[16]

Alberto Fujimori, 52, was elected president of Peru in 1990 as word spread that this son of Japanese immigrants would end Peru's poverty painlessly. Thanks to his heritage, the voters hoped it would help lure millions of yen in aid and trade from Japan. As he completed his first year in office last July 28 of a single five year term, Peru was still a "basket case," being plagued by massive unemployment, narco traffic, corruption in government, a deadly guerrilla war, plus earthquakes, drought and more recently the cholera epidemic and loss of tourist dollars as a result.

But Fujimori has begun to turn things around.

Talking with a Texas newspaperman (David L. Marcus, South American bureau chief for Dallas Times Herald[17]), Fujimori proudly related the strong popular support in the countryside of his government's strategy to reduce inflation, corruption, terrorism and growing of coca leaves.

"The problems are difficult. Everyone is conscious of that, but they are problems that can be overcome," says Fujimori."We cannot say we have brought about results in the drug fight, the fight against terrorists and in economic reform, but we are in the process.

"Instead of feeling headaches, I feel satisfied. As I said when I assumed the presidency of the republic, all the problems can be faced with realism, objectivity and honesty."

Fujimori's outward confidence shows he has gained one of his biggest political victories by merely surviving.

"In the political sphere, you don't feel so much instability anymore. At the beginning of my term, there was talk of coups, of the lack of a team, the lack of management," so Fujimori said as the interview was winding down.

The late evening news on television playing at his side showed images of chaos. While the President was talking of bringing order, striking teachers were taking over city hall, the medical workers were in their 105th day of walkout.

Security guards were lounging in a nearby room. The only interruption (so far as the newspaperman was concerned) inside the Palace was his wife Susana asking about his plans for the next day.

Economically, the situation is that Japan and the United States together have now promised some $750 million in aid, mostly to help Peru meet overdue interest to loans from international banks. The European

Profile of Peru

Among Quechua Indians, Peru means "land of abundance." Sites of Machu Pjcchu and Cuzco recall the wealth of the Inca civilization, obliterated in the early 1500s by Spaniards who built an empire on an abundance of gold and silver. Today Peru ranks among the world's top ten producers of silver, copper, lead, and zinc. Its petroleum industry is one of the world's oldest, and its fisheries are among the world's richest.

Yet the country has been called "a beggar seated on a bench of gold." Peruvians have been assailed by food shortages, hyperinflation, and an escalating guerrilla war begun in 1980, the year democracy replaced a military dictatorship. A third of Peru's children under six suffer from chronic malnutrition. President Alan Garcia Perez, elected in 1985, approved "parcelization" to individual farmers of cooperatives established in 1969 in a massive but ineffective land redistribution program.

Allegations of murder, torture, intimidation and corruption dog the military and police give carte blanche in the war against the ruthless Maoist guerrilla organization Sendero Luminoso (Shining Path). Indians are innocent victims caught between the two forces. More than 15,000 deaths have been attributed to the conflict, and Sendero continues to consolidate its grip on the countryside. Its alliance with drug traffickers enables farmers in the upper Huallaga Valley to grow 60 percent of the world's coca, generating one billion dollars annually. Environmental groups oppose U.S. proposals to destroy these crops by aerial spraying of herbicides.

AREA: 496,225 sq mi (California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada and half of Arizona = 481,500 sq mi.). POPULATION: 21,449,000. CAPITAL: Lima, pop. 5,008,400. RELIGION: Roman Catholic. LANGUAGE: Spanish, Quechua, Aymara. (1989). LIFE EXPECTANCY: 61. ECONOMY: Industry: mining and mineral processing, petroleum refining, textiles, food processing, motor vehicles, metal products, cement. Export crops: fish meal, cotton, sugar, coffee. Food crops: corn/maize, potatoes, rice, livestock. PCI: $1,430. (In California, the PCI = $16,753. The World Bank in 1989 defined a high income country as having a PCI of $6,000 or more). As an indicator, it is a statistical average, does not take into account the quality of life, environmental degradation, educational opportunities nor health care.)

A CHRISTMAS PRAYER
from the New Mexico JACL Chapter

Heavenly Father, we call you by many names, The Enlightened One, Allah, Jesus. During this holy season we thank you for all the gifts you have given us, for our brothers and sisters who are white, black, brown, red and yellow, many of whom where compassionate and understanding in our times of travail.

We pray that when we suffer from the actions of the few who would dislike us because of our ancestry, you will not let us forget the many who judge us on the content of our hearts and souls. We pray that you will give us the courage to confront and expel the prejudice and selfishness that lies in our own hearts, and replace it with love and understanding for all people. Amen.

Community, on the other hand, is worried about its own backyard and has not come through with the millions of dollars Peru had expected.

President Fujimori, surprisingly, followed plans usually laid out by the conservative banks to undo the maverick economic policies of the previous administration of Alan Garcia, who had drastically cutoff interest payments to the multi-billion dollar foreign loans. Now called the "Fujishock," he began by doubling, then tripling, then quadrupling gas prices; he reduced red tape for importers and exporters, he slashed budgets and began the terrible job of reorganizing state-run mines and harbors so they would be attractive to private investors.

At the same time, Fujimori has surprised his enemies and supporters alike. The U.S. Embassy has praised him, his intentions and the turn of events, especially his progress in the human rights field (inspite of Amnesty International). They first dismissed him as an unknown upstart. Yet he has also turned off his boosters: a half-dozen of his cabinet ministers have quit and the press is speculating more resignations are likely. (The latest cabinet shake-up in September included naming his third prime minister.)

In the countryside, the polls show his popularity has fallen more than 50% after he took office to 38%, as Peruvians openly wonder whether he will last the entire term. For all of Fujimori's expressed confidence, he acknowledges that one of his biggest political victories has been merely surviving.

The Issei story elsewhere in the Americas

As a personal footnote: It may be noteworthy to look at the Issei story throughout the Americas.

In Canada - where there are about 30,000, the first Issei had arrived in the 1890s as laborers in the farm, rail and fishing industries and 50 years later most of them lived in the cities. The rural-urban transition was also occurring in the United States and Brazil, where the populations were five to six times greater than Peru's.

In Mexico, however, of the 15,000 Issei there in the 1900s, the much-cited U.S. Immigration Report of 1907 by social historians in America, estimates two thirds of them (10,000) entered the U.S. illegally.

Talk with PANA Delegates at the Palace

Subsequent to the interview with the Texas newspaperman, President Fujimori met on Aug. 2, 1991, with 40 Nikkei enroute home from the PANA-Paraguay convention to California and British Columbia. He spoke in English. He thanked PANA-USA for its outstanding generosity and gift of old clothes to benefit the school children of Peru and accepted PANA International's request to be its honorary president. Fujimori's verbatim comments of his first year in office come from a Rafu Shimpo (Y. Nagashima) reporter's tape.

"This is my first anniversary and as you have seen probably the job was very hard. This is probably the most difficult country to be the president of. We have a lot of problems certainly, the most difficult in all the world .... We have all the problems (of the world) concentrated in one country.

"Moreover, we have heavy debts and an economic crisis, but the people were willing to take a big chance in the political situation and elected me from a group of candidates. I was an unknown candidate as you know (so) this was really a revolution here. People are tired of politics in the traditional way.

"But we try to respond with a message that a change is coming. Of course, the results will not be seen very soon. We have worked a lot in the year. We are trying to change our country. Maybe the newspapers have not noticed, but the changes made in many items are economic and very deep.

"As you know, I am free; I said this to the people of the United States, also to their Congress. We are free; we are a government free of compromise with any power, political power or economical power. And this lets us take these steps in favor of the economy and, of course, the people. Even if the message was so hard, so strong, people at all levels still support us. You can see this everywhere. I notice that when I go outside, go to the streets, to the meetings where the people are. Even with all of this sacrifice, they understand all these measures and all these politics."

Fujimori explained that harsh steps were necessary to solve the problems of drug traffickers and terrorists. His government has completely changed the strategy to fight the narco-traffickers, and with the agreement of the United States. Fujimori didn't sign the $36 million aid package from the U.S. because "we didn't agree (with the Bush Administration's strategy) on how to fight narco-traffic and terrorists.

"Fortunately this year, we arrived at a very important change - a concept that will let us fight in a better, more effective way narco-traffic that also affects the United States and many other countries."

The other big job is to combat terrorism. There are two terrorist groups that have developed in the past 11 years. Fujimori said the strategy here has also changed drastically by enlisting the population on the side of the government all over the country. He called it a "peace and guns" policy. In the rural areas, this policy adds the people on the side of the army and the police. "It will take time for it to be successful. These steps are very significant." The guns he wanted were anti-aircraft pieces to shoot down planes that are engaged in narco-traffic.

On the economic picture, he said Peru has built its reserve to $800 millions in just six months. The government has been clear on where it must go to stay ahead, improve capital flow and attract foreign investments. He expected the situation will be better in another year. (As of mid November, the U.S.-Peru foreign exchange was on par $1 to 1 new sol. When the new Peruvian sol was established on Jan. 1, 1991, the exchange was 2 new soles to US$1.)

'Glad That We Came'

Fujimori told the PANA-USA delegates he was very glad they were all visiting Peru (despite the alarming stories of terrorists killing three technicians from Japan helping on a Nikkei farm project near Lima just three weeks prior and the tourist-scaring cholera epidemic). "I expect that you will come more frequently and with more people for as you have seen, there is not very much of a problem in the streets."

He then related what the president of the biggest company in Peru, a U.S. company, said when he attended a conference in New York - that the streets in Lima are safer than New York's. "Here, we can walk around much more free." It's all an image problem. "Unfortunately, we have the image that this is a country of too many terrorists, which is not true. At least we don't need a jacket against--bullets as many people in New York have."

Fujimori hopes that the strict measures that he and his government have put into motion will turn the trend around "so that we can strengthen our collaboration between Latin American countries, U.S. and Canada."

Acknowledging his Japanese origin, Fujimori modestly hopes to be "an example to all American and Latin American Nikkei (and make) a much needed and serious contribution to their country - even participation in politics." He said: "I was not a politician. I was an academician. But if the country needs a contribution in any other field, I am sure, the Nikkei people will make their best effort (to contribute)."

(He has assured his Friends in PANA that if he survives one month in office, he would last a half year, and if a half year, then a year. If he lasts a year, surely, he will survive two; and if two, then the entire five years. We not only believe him and pray that he will as are the Nikkei especially in Peru.)[18]

Within the Palace, one guard surveying the empty halls and waiting rooms reminisced to the Texas newspaperman about the 1980s during the free-spending days of former President Alan Garcia, a charismatic, smooth-talking bear of a man. Many say Mr. Garcia's popularity and irresponsibility drove Peru to its precarious state. The palace guard remembered Mr. Garcia for his dinner parties and lively atmosphere. "There were always people coming in and out when Garcia was president. But Fujimori has a dry personality. This place has gotten so quiet."

But another Palace escort, who had accompanied the PANA guests last August 2, however, said what Fujimori has instituted is unprecedented: he is inviting the school children to a meal at the Palace. Three meals are served 365 days a year, plus giving clothing, shoes or school material to the needy. About a 100 kids are served at each meal.

Fujimori on C-SPAN

Another inside story of Peru was told in detail the week of Sept. 15 when President Fujimori met with President Bush and was guest luncheon speaker Sept. 18 at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C. His talk and the question and answer period were aired by C-SPAN. Fujimori told the journalists, "It is necessary that we come to know each other, in part, because of a tragic phenomenon. Your country is the world's largest consumer of cocaine, and mine is the world's largest producer of coca .... Peru is a country facing its problems and beginning to solve them under a democratically elected government. It must be argued that if we solve our end of the dark problems, we will be helping you solve yours."

The Registry, in 1606, noted one Japanese named Miguel de Silva and four Chinese masons arrived to repair a stone bridge, which was been knocked down by an earthquake the previous year, according to a story in the Mercurio Peruano in October, 1942.

In 1873, Peru and Japan signed a treaty of commerce and amity; and the first Peruvian consul to Japan, Oscar Heeren, returned home with four Japanese workers for his Hacienda San Carlos in 1874.

In 1883, a Japanese naval training ship arrived in Callao May 15, and a seaman, Kichiro Kojima, died of illness that day and was buried at the British cemetery at Bellavista.

In 1885, Marikichi Nakamura, believed to be one of the four who accompanied Heeren from Japan, had married a Peruvian, and had four children. Eldest son, Nicanor, was reported by the press in 1917 as having met with the Japanese consul and Japanese society in Lima. Today (1974), the Nakamuras are sixth generation.

Another among the four with Heeren was a gardener, Tatsugoro Matsumoto, 24, who constructed the Japanese garden at La Quinta Heeren in 1888 and returned to Japan in 1890. Matsumoto returned to America, not to Peru, but to Mexico and became a most successful flower grower.

In 1893 Ryu Banju, who was also among the Heeren four, was consulted by immigration official Ikutaro Aoyagi from Japan. Banju was then working with the Central Railroad of Peru as a supervisor. In 1897, Minister Yoshitsumi Murota arrived in Lima to establish the Japanese legation. He was concurrently Japanese minister to Mexico. In 1898, the Japan-Peru immigration treaty was signed; one section stipulated Japanese would not be regarded as "slaves."-

a part of the Japanese operation .... It is hard to justify our pulling them from their homes of years and herding them, whether both in Japan or in Peru, onto ships bound for a strange land, where they would live in concentration camps under conditions which at best were difficult, in spite of chicken on Sunday .... Of course, we were at the same time interning our own citizens in relocation centers .... During my service in the embassy, we found no reliable evidence of planned or contemplated acts of sabotage, subversion or espionage. Stories that many adult male Japanese in Peru held commission in the imperial army and navy were never verified..."

PEARL

stove to cook for her family and the few young student lunchtime customers an anti-aircraft shell fell on the saimin stand, severely wounding Kikuyo and killing her husband, her three children, including Yoneto, and eight of her regular customers.

One of the anti-aircraft shells exploded in the yard of Washington Place, the home of Gov. Joseph B. Poindexter, who invoked the MD Act for which the legislature had empowered him. Short appeared and told him the MD Act was insufficient. After a phone call to Roosevelt, Poindexter, shortly before 4 P.M., turned the government over to Short. Proclaiming himself Military Governor, Short closed all schools. Chuo Gakuin was never to reopen.

In the meantime, Fuchikami, continued on his errands. Rumors of landed Japanese paratroopers were rife. In his RCA uniform, he may have looked like one.

As he was returning down Kalihi Valley, after delivering a telegram, members of the Hawaiian Territorial Guard stopped him. He was stopped again by the police on King Street, who permitted him to pass when he showed he had a message for the Commanding General, Fort Shafter. At Fort Shafter, the sentry waved him through as usual. It was sometime after nine when he delivered the telegram, but it may not have been until 11:28 that the telegram was logged and decoded.

Short had learned of the attack at eight. When he finally received the telegram he threw it in the waste-basket. Kimmel disposed of his copy similarly.

On Niihau Island, the isolated island at the eastern end of the archipelago, Irene Umeno Harada and her husband, Yoshio, watched a group of the retreating Japanese planes fly past. After a great number of planes passed they saw the final two, one sputtering and pouring forth black smoke.

"That one's been damaged," said Yoshio.

Actually they had both been damaged, and the lesser damaged, was to change the life of both of them and to leave a black mark on the reputation of the Nikkei.

About the same time, back in Honolulu, the Kida children, Umeyo and Namie, had escaped from the Chuo Gakuin auditorium. Nevertheless, tragedy awaited the family.

Between 9 and 9:30 A.M. the next day, American fighter planes, P-40s, sighted four fishing boats about two miles off Barber's Point, Oahu. One was the Kiho Maru, captained by Sutematsu Kida, 54, father of the Kida children just mentioned. Aboard was his son, Kiichi, 21; Kiho Uehara, 29, and Seiki Arakaki, 21.

The Kiho Maru had been out at sea since December 4. The ship was without a radio and only learned of the attack when another sampan pulled alongside and delivered the news.

At daybreak, the Kiho Maru, along with three other fishing boats, headed toward Diamond Head. The P-40s appeared, each picked a target and attacked.

A plane strafed the Kiho Maru from the stern, circled to its left and strafed the port side. It made a final run from the bow.

Two bullets tore through Arakaki's left leg just below the knee. Bullets struck his son, Kiichi, in jaw and back. Bullets hit Uehara in the back. Only Arakaki survived.

The score for the other boats was three dead, five injured. Within a week after she learned of the deaths, the hair of Kida's widow turned gray.

Anti-aircraft fire did a half-million dollars worth of damage to Honolulu. It was the cause of almost all of the 68 civilians killed and the 35 wounded.

The striking success of the attack spurred an immediate search for scapegoats on whom to pin the blame. The local press continued to confound the local Nikkei with the enemy. Thus the slain Masako Arakaki was identified by the press as a "Japanese girl." Since most of the casualties were Nikkei, and the explosions that caused them were represented as Japanese bombs, the public was encouraged to believe the enemy had slain their own countrymen who, being conspirators, had gotten their just deserts.

The local "Japanese" were accused of cutting arrows in the canefields to direct the enemy to targets the enemy could see from miles away. They were accused of attempting to poison the water supply. Captured airmen were said to be wearing rings of Honolulu's McKinley High School. A milk truck was said to have entered Schofield Barracks, where its sides were pushed off to reveal Japanese machine-gunners, who opened fire.

On the Island of Kauai, Lt. Jack Mizuha, a Nikkei who had expatriated from his Japanese citizenship, had been in command of Burns Field. The Pearl Harbor attack brought swift demotion - to executive officer.

On the Saturday following the attack, he was sitting in the orderly room of the blacked-out wooden barracks when he learned that a group of natives from the neighboring Island of Niihau had rowed across the strait to report that an armed Japanese flier, aided by the previously mentioned Haradas and by Ishimatsu Shintani, a Japanese alien, was terrorizing the island.

When the hysteria over the attack subsided, the other reports of Nikkei collusion might be scotched as rumor. But here was a substantiated case.

Far from being dismayed, Mizuha volunteered to lead a rescue squad to Niihau. When his squad arrived on the scene the following day, with another Nikkei, Ben Kobayashi, as member, it found the crisis had passed. A native and his wife had attacked the pilot, who shot him three times. The wounded native, nevertheless, picked up the pilot and dashed him against a stone wall. The wife beat his head in with a rock.

Harada committed hara-kiri with a shotgun blast to the belly.

Mizuha took Mrs. Harada and Shintani into custody.

The contribution of the Mizuha expedition towards checking the hatred being directed at the Nikkei can be judged by the kind of statement that came from Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox the same day.

Knox had been to Hawaii to investigate the debacle of Pearl Harbor. Back in Washington, he told reporters, "The most effective fifth-column work in this war was done in Hawaii, with the exception of Norway."

To his audience, the words "fifth column" and "Norway" rang a message loud and clear. The term "fifth column" originated as a term for sympathizers of the rebel Gen. Francisco Franco during the Spanish Civil War, in allusion to a statement made in 1936 that the insurgents had four columns marching on Madrid and a fifth column of sympathizers in the city ready to rise and betray it.

The German dictator, Adolf Hitler, had so infiltrated with fifth columnists those areas he planned to annex that some, such as Austria, fell to him without a struggle. Norwegian Vidkun Quisling laid the groundwork for collaboration with German occupation forces before the attack on Norway began.

Newspapers carried the story with such headlines as "Fifth Column Treachery Told," "Fifth Column Prepared Attack" and "Secretary of Navy Blames 5th Column for the Raid."

Knox was mistaken. The Niihau incident was unique. In an official report, January 26, 1942, Naval Lt. C. B. Baldwin was to write: "The fact that the two Niihau Japanese who had previously shown no anti-American tendencies went to the aid of the pilot when Japan domination seemed possible, indicates likelihood that Japanese residents previously believed loyal to the United States may aid Japan if further Japanese attacks appear successful."

Note that Baldwin, despite his sober assessment, nevertheless identifies all Nikkei as Japanese. There was no proven case of espionage or sabotage by the resident Nikkei, except for the burning down of a house on Niihau by Harada and the pilot and their attempt to burn the pilot's damaged plane.

A suggestion to intern the Nikkei on the Island of Molokai came to nothing. They were needed in the war effort. Nevertheless, in the armed camp of Oahu, where so many of them were employed, they were required to wear a badge marked RESTRICTED, reminiscent of the Star of David that Jews and alleged Jews were required to wear in Europe to mark them for discrimination.

Mainland Nikkei should note that it was in the fetid atmosphere of Hawaiian propaganda that the movement for internment was born and that the local propaganda mill is turning out the same alien product that it did in 1941, without protest from the local Nikkei who learned nothing from their wartime humiliation.

pressing her breast together. It hangs on the back of the front door to Norma Jean's studio apartment. Two autobiographies on the dead actress lay on the table next to the full size bed with the quiet yellow comforter. She doesn't like to read and doesn't know the definition of "carcinogenic." But she likes to smell the pages of the books.

An open box of Kellog's Frosted Flakes waits on the kitchen counter. She has two bowls every morning. And when there is no milk she uses—ice cream. There's never any time for aerobics and her weight has gone up to 143 pounds. Her legs are still muscular but spider veins have tatooed themselves to her ankles and inner thighs. Light support panty hose caress the legs that Walter Pendergon once wrapped around his neck as she lost her virginity. Sliding in and out of her he said "I want to see how you are made." Then he pounded into her. She couldn't move. His sweat fell into her mouth and she swallowed the salt from which he was created. He sucked her toes and tickled the bottom of her feet. Now they smell from nylons that haven't been washed and white tennis shoes.

Today he works for a vegetarian food company that distributes to Trader Joe's. He spends most of the day studying pamplets on various diseases and how the government is involved in spreading them. He never thinks of her.

"At least I'm not doing sleaze anymore." She says and we hug goodbye. I want to go with her. But I'm not as strong. She walks to the coffee shop up Gower Street. Past the fatigue blue grey twelve unit apartment building with the seven foot black iron gate and the coarse tan apartments where they use flowered sheets as curtains. A six year old boy in a white t-shirt and brown corduroy shorts runs up and down the cement stairway.

Across the street at the Columbia Bar and Grill, writers who are only eight years older than her, relish brunch with the top television executives. The waiters have to know someone to get a job, because all the ambitious actors want to work there. The valets have dominion over half the block and service patrons who complain about the $2.50 charge. She doesn't have a car but requires the exercise. She wants to look good because she has put in an application at Nordstroms. She wants to sell Lancome but is willing to sell Clinique.

Predic Brown is wrong. The horror in stories is not the implication of the three dots. It isn't the "unknown" that is so horrifying. The horror is in what we do know. The truth.

"Whole wheat or rye toast?" She asks with a heavy smile that is never noticed. She tries to imagine herself selling make up and married to a wealthy man. And she remembers that this morning she sat at the small breakfast table and wrote a letter on her 8 x 11 1/2 legal pad to Frank Von Alleman, a producer she met while boxing in Atlantic City. He seemed to take an interest in her. It was handwritten and she inquired with callow blue ink if he is involved in a current production. If so would he consider her for one of the roles. She signed off with the initials k.i.t. for "keep in touch" and had to fold the paper six times to fit in the envelope. She used an old Christmas stamp and drew a smiling face on the back flap. Maybe he will write her back.

She waits and collects her tips. Even the pennies.

WINTER

like the Lazy Boy recliner Father spends most of his days in. The chaise, however, would remain unoccupied. Father was imprisoned in his wheelchair by his own uncooperative stroke-stunned limbs. Mother and I simply stared at it. It reminded us that we were in a Psychiatrist's office and this was not a physical.

As the doctor rattled off questions for Father I fixed my gaze on his feet resting in the stirrups of the wheelchair. They were cloaked in black Reebok aerobic shoes specially fitted with Velcro closures. For years Father wore the same shoes from Sears. The style never changed: black hard leather lace-ups with hard leather soles. Dad shoes. Work shoes. Suit shoes. Middle-class shoes. Sears has carried the same style since 1905 shoes.

One day Mother bought him Reeboks. From that day on Father wouldn't have anything but Reeboks. Then he got sick.

Now the shoes walk from the hospital bed in their bedroom to the brown vinyl recliner and back. They walk to the station wagon I unknowingly bought just in time to fit a wheelchair in the back. They hobble along with his cane. They never aerobicize.

I refocussed my attention on the doctor s questions: "How old are you?"

"73" my father mumbled. So far so good.

"What day is today?"

Father looked at me, his perpetually furrowed brow in an even tighter contortion, "Monday?. . . Tuesday? . . . Wednesday?. . . "

The doctor continued. "What month is it?"

Again, Father looks to me, "January? . . . February? . . . March?. . . " It is beyond the October of his life, I thought to myself, beyond the need for knowing.

Switching his tactic, the doctor asked him, "Who is the President?"

Father shook his head slowly. " I don't know," he said.

The doctor paused a moment andasked, "Where did you mee t your wife?"

"In the States."

Mother, who never saw American shores before meeting Father, dropped her head and sighed. The doctor asked us to wheel Father outside for a few moments. He turned to Father, " I'd like to say a few words to your family alone. You don't mind do you?"

Mother never laughs. It's not that she stopped laughing; she has never laughed. Whenever she has a few moments to rest I can find her sitting in Father's Lazyboy recliner watching Japanese variety shows. No change registers in her expression at the oft-handed joke or pratfall. On rare occasions when something is irresistibly funny, her whole body shakes as if a long dormant volcano is about to spout, weary of being suppressed for so long. She convulses but makes no sound except, perhaps, one small squeak, and then the storm subsides, her face becoming calm like the ripples in a pond spreading out.

During my grade school years I climbed every few nights into the bathtub with Mother. Facing each other, the steam coating us with perspiration we d talk and sing songs. "Tell me a story," I d say.

"There was a mother bird," she might begin, narrating in Japanese, "who had many chicks in her nest. Everyday she would find worms and feed each chick, placing the worms in their mouths. Everyday, they would wait and open their beaks at her return. That year winter came early. It became very cold. Leaves began to fall from their tree and all around the air was full with swirling brown leaves. Still, everyday Mother bird would search for food, flying out further each day. Every day, the chicks knew they could count on her to return with their meal. They were still too young to fly on their own. Days past and the leaves stopped swirling in the air. White, cold powder took its place. At night, Mother bird slept close to her children to keep them warm. Everyday she brought them food. They grew strong, but Mother bird was growing weaker. She was thin and when the day came that her chicks were strong enough to fly on their own, she died. Her children held her and cried. Then, when they lifted her up to fly her to her final resting place they found that under her wings her flesh had been eaten away to the bone. When she could no longer find food for her children she had fed them with her own body so that they might live."

The steam was hot. My skin was red and I wept.

Mother held the elevator door open as I wheeled Father in from the second floor corridor of the medical building. "Maybe this Prozac will help," I told her.

"Soo ne. Mo chotto genki ni nare ba," she paused with a sigh. If he gets even a little more energy, maybe it's not so hard."

"I wish," I said wistfully," he would have given us some, too." Though I really didn't think he would.

"Other doctor give us Xanax. Mo nakunatta, already gone. Taban, anti-depression medicine better."

"Maybe, " I said, hoping this was my chance to convince her to get therapy for herself," you should go to that Japanese-speaking therapist I found in Gardena. They could give you something if you need it. I'm going to a therapist, too.

She stiffened. "No, Iranai. I don't need. Too much medicine not good for you, you know. People take medicine everyday get cancer."

I remained silent.

Last week, on a night like every other, I sat in the room I grew up in, upon the handknit bedspread Mother made when I was in the third grade. Bambi, our small white cockspoo, was curled upon my lap. Covered with fleas, her fur was wet where she chewed at their bites. Five or more to an inch they speckled the pale of her coat despite flea baths, collars, and sprays. Just as I had begun to pick them out one by one and crack them between my thumbnails I heard Mother half sigh, half scream in her bedroom. I rushed over and stood at the doorway. Father was leaning on his four-pronged cane with his pajama pants in a puddle around his ankles. "I just change!" she said to me. "He pee in his pants and before I finish change he pee again.Mattaku! Now I have to change again." She closed the bureau drawer and turned to him holding the third pair of pajama pants. "Don' t pee!" Father seemed unfazed.

"Can I help, Mama?" I asked.

"No," she said. "Iiyo"

No, no, no, I thought and leaned my head against the wall sighing.

Father looked up at me and said, "How you doin'?"

"Fine," I said. "Fine."

I walked back to my room, back to the task at hand. Bambi looked up at me from the bed, her stump of a tail wagging. I sat with her, picking out and crushing the fleas, unable to focus my thoughts. Fifteen minutes, maybe more, had past and I lifted Bambi off my lap and wandered into the hallway, back to Father s room . Their room, with its two twin beds, one now replaced by a mechanized hospital bed, was lit only by the TV set. Dad, in the hospital bed, was spitting. Nothing new, he can't swallow his own saliva and spits it out constantly.

"How you doin'?" I asked

He spit again, began to cough. I waited, sitting on Mother's companion I Love Lucy bed. "Fine," he says finally.

"What are you watching?" I asked.

"Hillbilly music," he said. Father always called it Hillbilly music. It could be anything from Boxcar Willy to the glitziest Urban Cowboy but it was always Hillbilly music.

"Who's the band?" I asked, pointing at the twanging quintet glowing in front of him .

He spit, then hacked deep from his chest for a minute or two. "I don't know," he said.

"You need anything?" I asked.

"No."

I let out a small, inaudible sigh. I tried to think of something to talk to him about but nothing came. "You call me if you need anything." I said, rising and walking toward the door.

He spit, and said, "Thank you, honey."

I turned and smiled at him as best I could and walked out. The sounds of Hillbilly music faded as I got further from his room.

Growing up I was surrounded by Country Western music and Japanese Enka. I hated both. To me, both were some form of atonal wailing . I hated Country Western especially. I was embarrassed by Father playing hick music while he worked in the garage, its cacophonous tones floating out into the neighborhood.

These days, Father watches TV all day long. He is mostly unaware of what he is watching. I am aware. It is the Nashville Network on cable channel 19, 24 hours a day of continuous Country Western music programming. In my own room flipping channels last night, I came upon The Country Music Awards show on network television. I was confused by the fact that I was compelled to watch it. Even more so, I was confused to find that I was enjoying it. When I recovered I went to my Father's room to tell him it was on. I changed the channel for him and walked to his bedside. Reaching over the railing to take his hand, the right hand that still feels but no longer moves, I asked, 'Need anything Daddy?"

He looked up at me and said in a quiet voice, 'Just you.

I was slightly uneasy and made light of it. "What do you need me for?" I asked, smiling.

"To talk to me."

I sat on Mother s bed and watched the Country Music Awards with him. He slept through most of it, I stayed, and decided I would not wait so long to discover I liked Enka.

One of Mother' s greatest frustrations in life has always been the tomato and cucumber vines that Father planted in the spares between her Japanese-style topiary trees. They weren't a problem when they were seedlings but they inevitably climbed up the carefully shaped and guided branches, covering them with unsightly vines. Mother loved a neat, controlled garden. Father grew up on a farm in Louisiana and preferred plants that would feed us. Opposites, they say, attract. The vines and the trees formed their own sort of peace with one another, growing on each other but never completely blending. Recently, while weeding Mother said to me, "Ne, I been thinking lately garden looks neat. Now I know why. No more tomato plant." She paused. "I always like fresh tomato. So much better than market."

My car smells of him, my father. It smells of the room where lies night after night. It smells of the hospital bed and the sheets that are removed and washed three times a day. It smells of the urine bottles that line its railing at night. It smells of the Desitin that soothes his bed sores and calms the chronic rash that arose from the constant moisture beneath him.

Today, as I wheeled him out of the Medical office building after our visit with the Psychiatrist, Mother lined the passenger seat of my car with a garbage bag folded in quarters. I reached my arm underneath Father's shoulder and helped to lift him into standing position. He grabbed onto the door frame with his one good hand and eased in. Slowly his weakened legs still dangling out the door, he struggled to swing them in. I fastened the seatbelt as he spit into a piece of tissue, and closed the door.

As we drove home, Father sat with his head down. His head, with his cheeks gaunt and sunken, seemed smaller than I remembered it. His body , too, seemed smaller, lighter. He is tired, I thought, and most of him has already left his physical form behind.

In my mind I saw him lifting his paralyzed right arm, shaking it free of the blood accumulating below the wrist. With it, he wiped his brow of the sweat of age, the sweat of exhaustion from life: the thick, slimy perspiration that normally cannot be washed off . He then reached out to point out the passenger side window at the minimall being built around the corner from our house. He plans to walk to it, he said. It will give him a destination on his daily stroll, new merchants to chat with: the crackerbarrel in the general store of modern suburban life. He remembers, he said, the store his father sat at, whiling away sultry, southern summer days. Now, he is far from small-town life and rolling berry fields in farm communities. He is far from the days of picking cotton in the dark hours before the trek to the weathered schoolhouse. In days past, he reached out at the memory of planting tomato vines amidst the shrubbery bordering his perfectly groomed suburban lawn.

When I was young the tomato vines frightened me. They were the crawling, pale green of worms rather than the deep green of grass. They were arms that reached out at me hiding horned tomato slugs in camouflaged tones. Daddy laughed, said not to worry and picked out the slugs like ripe fruit, throwing them onto the driveway where their green juice would spatter across its clean, white surface.

In my mind, as we drove home, I saw Daddy sitting beside me reaching out his stroke-stunned, swollen light hand to pluck the worms from my hair like ripe fruit, tossing them out the window to spatter on the black-gray of asphalt.

Back home we helped Father back into his hospital bed. I lifted and snapped the chrome railing into place, leaned on it with both forearms and smiled at him.

"I'm tired," he said and looked at me with weary, clouded eyes.

"It's o.k., Daddy," I told him . "You just rest. You've had a long day, haven' t you?"

He reached for a tissue, and hacked for several minutes. Any bit of exertion seems to disrupt the delicate calm of his body, it convulsed as his face strained to rid itself of the phlegm that had a strangle hold on his throat. As his body stilled he said, "Yes," and crumpled the tissue with one hand. He gave it to me and I closed my grip around it tightly, as if it held demons. He looked at me again, tried to return my smile.

"Wish I had your eyes." I said.

"They can't see too good anymore," he said, his smile fading.

"But they're still blue," I said, "Sky blue sometimes, and green sometimes. I can see rolling green hills in your eyes, Daddy. Meadows and fields of berry bushes under a hot, summer-blue sky."

He smiled again, soft and weak but not forced. I see that sometimes too." he said. " Long as I can see that I'm fine."

"Me too, Daddy," I said, "me too," and leaned way over the railing to give him a kiss. Walking into the hallway I found Mother. She was standing there, very still with her arms wrapped around herself an her eyes closed tight. Mother cried as seldom as she laughed; no tears fell as she stood there but she was trembling very slightly, almost unnoticeably. I walked over to her and put my arms around her. As she looked up at me I said. "Don't worry, Mama. Daddy is fine. Really, truly, he's fine. Someday, I thought, someday perhaps truth won't elude us and these small lies will cease to entrap us in the white atrophied sinews of stroke-stunned musculature. Someday, perhaps, we will all be fine.

Reaching over the railing to take his hand, the right hand that still feels but no longer moves, I asked, 'Need anything Daddy?'

He looked up at me and said in a quiet voice, 'Just you.

I was slightly uneasy and made light of it. 'What do you need me for?" I asked, smiling. To talk to me."
