JACL Disappointed By Decision to End DACA

The JACL is deeply disappointed by the Trump administration’s decision to end the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program. DACA has supported nearly 800,000 young immigrants, or Dreamers, who have worked hard to fit the program’s strict requirements. As a nation, we have always prided ourselves on protecting the innocent. In this case, we have failed the children who were brought to this country by their parents, have created full lives as Americans and have done nothing wrong as they fulfilled their parents’ dreams. To take away these children’s dreams is especially cruel and vicious.

Repeal of DACA protections will create unnecessary chaos in the communities as families will be torn apart. Additionally, America will experience significant losses to the economy. The cost of workforce replacement alone is estimated to cost American businesses $3.4 billion in turnover costs. The overall impact to the economy is estimated to be $460.3 billion in lost GDP over the next 10 years. This disruption and chaos the repeal of DACA will create is reminiscent of when 120,000 Japanese Americans were uprooted from their communities, homes and businesses during World War II and placed in concentration camps. For many in the Japanese American community, our immigration occurred many years ago with our Issei generation. Our community is built upon their dreams.

It is with this knowledge of what the American dream has meant for our community, and the dreams of the Issei who have immigrated more recently, that we stand with the immigrant community today in opposition to DACA’s repeal. For many in the Japanese American community today in opposition to DACA’s repeal.

We urge Congress to find common ground in preserving the American dream and pass the bipartisan Dream Act of 2017. — JACL National

As DACA Termination Looms, Advancing Justice-LA, Among Others, Focuses on Urgent DACA Renewals and Vows to Fight for All Immigrants

LOS ANGELES — United States Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced Sept. 5 the termination of the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program effective March 5, 2018. In response, Asian Americans Advancing Justice — Los Angeles and other organizations spoke out to explain what the termination means — what was announced, what those eligible for renewal can and should do, other options for current DACA recipient and state and federal legislative responses. Advancing Justice-LA will provide free legal assistance for current DACA recipients, including those seeking renewal.

“In the five years since the creation of DACA, Advancing Justice-LA has helped thousands of young immigrants secure DACA status and emerge from the shadows,” said Stewart Kwoh, president and executive director of Advancing Justice-LA. “It has been a true lifeline for these young people — most of whom know no other country — allowing them to work above ground and contribute fully to their families, communities and economy. Now, with the end of DACA looming ahead, we are committed to helping as many as possible and fighting for their place in our democracy.”

Since its creation in 2012, DACA has transformed the lives of nearly 800,000 young people by providing temporary relief from deportation and work authorization. California is home to more than 200,000 “DACAmented” immigrants, with the largest group living in the Southern California region. Among the DACA recipients affected by the termination are many Asian and Pacific Islander immigrants. Between 2012 and 2017, more than 16,000 Asian immigrants received protection under DACA.

Important points included in the U.S. Department of Homeland Security’s memorandum rescinding DACA include:

• No new DACA applications will be accepted as of Sept. 5
• Current DACA recipients will continue to have their deferred status and work authorization until they expire.
• Current DACA recipients whose work authorization expires between Sept. 5 and March 5, 2018 can renew their work permits, but must submit their renewal applications before Oct. 5.
• No new applications of “advance parole” will be approved, allowing DACA recipients to travel outside of the U.S., and current

For many in the Japanese American community, our immigration occurred many years ago with our Issei generation. Our community is built upon their dreams.

It is with this knowledge of what the American dream has meant for our community, and the dreams of the Issei who have immigrated more recently, that we stand with the immigrant community today in opposition to DACA’s repeal.

We are a nation of immigrants, with the dream of building a better life, both individually and for our country.

We urge Congress to find common ground in preserving the American dream and pass the bipartisan Dream Act of 2017.

All the recent controversy over “whitewashing” — Hollywood’s habit of casting white people in Asian roles — got me thinking about how Japan has been portrayed in films.

Because I was born in Japan, my earliest movie memories are chuburas, or samurai (and especially ninja), movies that I watched in black and white on television. My mom used to take my brother and me to Disney features when they opened, riding the trains with us to the cinema. As I grew up, I treasured American films that were set in Japan. There haven’t been a whole lot, but it’s interesting to see how Hollywood depictions have shown Americans’ stereotypes of Japan, and how that’s changed over the years.

‘Sayonara’

This 1957 movie means a lot to me because it shows Japan of the year I was born. It’s shot in Technicolor that casts a warm Kodachrome glow to the images. The film stars Marlon Brando as a hotshot Korean War Air Force fighter ace who is stationed in Japan. His buddy, played by Red Buttons, falls in love with a Japanese woman who is played by Miyoshi Umeki, who some of you might remember from the late 1960s TV series “The Courtship of Eddie’s Father.”

Brando, like the military brass, doesn’t approve. Buttons’ character eventually despairs, and his relationship ends tragically. Meanwhile, Brando falls in love with a Japanese woman, played by Miiko Taka. The story is subtle and complex, the scenes are gorgeously shot, and the only thing that mars the film is the casting of Latino actor Ricardo Montalban as a Japanese stage star.

But this bit of “cross-ethnic yellowface” doesn’t ruin the film. It’s a classic. It resonates all the more for me because my dad was in the Army during the Korean War, and he was discouraged from having a relationship with my mom, who he met while he was stationed in Hokkaido. They had to have a series of meetings with superiors before they were allowed to marry.

‘The Geisha Boy’

The late comedian Jerry Lewis was no stranger to racism. You can find photos of him online with thick glasses and buck teeth, playing an over-the-top version of a Japanese person. But his 1958 movie “The Geisha Boy” is a little gem.

Lewis is the “Great Woodyly,” a hapless magician who can’t get any gigs stateside and is sent overseas on a USO tour to entertain troops in Japan and Korea. Even before he leaves America, the movie establishes that he’s a klutz, who repeatedly offends the star of the USO tour, a movie star played by Marie McDonald.

The opening scene also introduces Harry, his comic foil, a rabbit. Harry is surprisingly great throughout the movie. The story line is about an orphaned little boy (Robert Hirano) who falls in love with Lewis and his aunt, played by Nobu McCarthy, who we can tell also has feelings for Lewis.

Japan in the movie is recovered from WWII and is beautifully depicted, especially in a series of scenes where Lewis and the boy play tourist and visit spots like Kamakura, known for a giant statue of Buddha. Lewis and the boy play tourist and visit spots like Kamakura, known for a giant statue of Buddha.

The movie deserves extra points for casting Suzanne Pleshette in her first role, an Army officer assigned as Lewis’ handler who also likes him, and for casting Sessue Hayakawa as McCarthy’s father, who bears an uncanny resemblance (nudge nudge) to the vicious Japanese officer from the 1957 movie “The Bridge on the River Kwai.” In a hilarious scene, the movie pays homage to “The River Kwai” with Hayakawa overseeing the building of a bridge over a koi pond.

‘Walk, Don’t Run’

Most people probably don’t remember this 1966 comedy starring Cary Grant, Jim Hutton and Samantha Eggar as three westerners (two Brits and an American) who cross paths in Japan during the Tokyo Olympics. Grant is a businessman; Hutton is an architect who happens to be on the U.S. Olympic team for a little-known sport, speed walking. Eggar lives in an apartment, and first Grant, then Hutton, end up as her roommates because all the hotel rooms are filled.

Comedy and romance ensue, with Grant playing the part of a dapper matchmaker. Tokyo is depicted pretty accurately and respectfully (including the crowded narrow street where the apartment is located), and the movie’s a breezy entertainment.

‘The Yakuza’

This late-career film noir triumph by Robert Mitchum is a 1974 introduction to the culture of the yakuza, the Japanese version of the mafia. Mitchum is asked by an old Army buddy to help clear a yakuza debt when the buddy is threatened. But to help, Mitchum has to confront a Japanese man who hates him — and the man’s sister, who Mitchum fell in love with during the postwar occupation of Japan. The action is terrific, and the plot twists unexpected. Fans of this film will also enjoy the 1989 movie “Black Rain,” starring Michael Douglas and Andy Garcia as New York cops tangled up with the yakuza in Japan.

‘The Karate Kid Part II’

The sequel to the original 1984 film “Karate Kid” once again features Ralph Macchio and Pat Morita, but this 1986 movie is set in Okinawa and was the acting debut of a lovely teenaged Tamilyn Tomita. What more do you need to know? It’s a sweet movie that captures the look and feel of small-town Japan (instead of the usual glamour of Tokyo), and its cast of conservative hooligans who pick fights with Macchio and Morita includes a wonderful job by Yuji Okumoto (who still

Agape

By Marsha Aizumi

I never know when a moment will move my heart. The place was Fresno, Calif., and the people were from a Christian church in the area. I had been introduced to a church member, Elena Tsuchiya, by Nikiko Masumoto, who spoke at our 2016 OKAERI: A Nikkei LGBTQ Gathering.

I loved Nikiko’s spirit so much when I met her that upon hearing a regional summit for API LGBTQ leaders was happening in the area she lived in, I reached out to her, so I could be around her wonderful energy again.

Elena and I talked before I came to Fresno, and she related so much to me. Although she did not have the shame and stigma I went through having an LGBTQ child, she also had two marginalized children as McCarthy’s father, who bears an uncanny resemblance

‘We wear these so when people see them, they will know in the LGBTQ community.'

One of the mothers shared that when she read about the shame and stigma I went through having an LGBTQ child, she related so much to me. Although she did not have LGBTQ children, she also had two marginalized children and felt many of the same feelings I had.

We bonded as mothers that knew our journeys had been hard, and felt many of the same feelings I had.

But we know we need to do more for love and inclusion for my son moves me so deeply and gives me hope that when I am gone, there will be others fighting for Aiden.

And I want to thank all of you, my readers, from cities near and far, large and small, for the work you are doing to bring greater awareness and compassion to the LGBTQ community.

I am so grateful for the work she is doing to bring greater awareness and compassion to the LGBTQ community.

I also want to thank Pastor Akiko for reaching out to me with “agape.” I am so grateful for the work she is doing to bring greater awareness and compassion to the LGBTQ community.

But I also feel the need to tell you of all you, my readers, from cities near and far, large and small, for the work you are doing to bring greater awareness and acceptance to your communities. Our world needs it more than ever . . . and so do families like mine . . . .

Los Angeles Celebrates Tanabata Festival

The festival celebrates the Tanabata (Seventh Night of the Seventh Moon), which is celebrated all over Japan. It features the display of huge handmade kazari (decorations) at the Geffen Museum of Contemporary Art (MOCA) plaza.

The event, which was officially included during Nisei Week in 2009, is supported by the Little Tokyo Public Safety Assn., the Japanese Prefectural Association of Southern California and the Nisei Week Foundation. The Consul General of Japan in Los Angeles is the permanent Honorary Chairman of the festival.

More than 120 handmade kazari were entered in this year’s competition; all were judged in six categories including anime/manga, business, government, individuals/family, Japanese Prefectural Assn. and institutions/nonprofit organizations.

This year’s Founder’s Award winner, which consists of the overall winner from each of the six categories, was All Nippon Airways.

Manzanar Celebrates Paiute-Shoshone Family With New Exhibit

The Manzanar National Historic Site will hold a public reception inside the Visitor Center on Sept. 15 for its newest exhibit “A Paiute Story From Manzanar,” which showcases 100 years of the Button family’s history at Manzanar.

The Button family, members of the Lone Pine Paiute-Shoshone tribe, has a long history with Manzanar dating back to the farming era. The family matriarch, Irene Button, lived with her family on Moffat Ranch, about four miles south of Manzanar. Irene Button’s uncle and great uncle, Louie and John Shepherd, respectively, were employed by John Shepherd on his ranch and were some of the first Paiute to take on their employer’s surname. The Eastern California Museum partnered with Manzanar to provide historic photographs for the exhibit.

holders of advance parole are not guaranteed admittance to the U.S.

“As Advancing Justice-LA will fight to keep DACA and pass the DREAM Act, we also urge all eligible DACA recipients to file for renewal,” said Aman Thind, immigration project director for Advancing Justice-LA.

Currently, Advancing Justice-LA’s staff is offering free renewal assistance to eligible DACA recipients. Renewal clinics are being offered throughout the month every Thursday at its downtown office.

“We call on Congress to immediately pass clean legislation that does not exploit immigrant youth as a bargaining chip for harsh enforcement measures, but instead respects the inherent dignity and humanity of all immigrants with a real path to citizenship for immigrant youth and their families,” said Betty Hung, policy director of Advancing Justice-LA.
NPS Announces $1.2 Million in Grants to Preserve and Interpret WWII Japanese American Confinement Sites

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The National Park Service announced Aug. 17 $1.2 million in grants to fund preservation, restoration and education projects at several Japanese American confinement sites, in addition to $1.6 million awarded earlier this year for a total of $2.8 million.

The 10 additional grantees in six states will tell the story of the more than 120,000 Japanese Americans, two-thirds of whom were U.S. citizens, who were imprisoned by the U.S. government following the Dec. 7, 1941, attack on Pearl Harbor by Japan.

"These grants tell a more complete history of the home front experience during World War II, highlighting the strength and resilience of Japanese Americans facing incarceration," said Acting National Park Service Director Michael T. Reynolds. "The National Park Service is excited to work with various partners that use modern, innovative methods to preserve sites and stories for future generations."

Congress established the Japanese American Confinement Sites grant program in 2006, authorizing a total of $38 million in funding for the life of the program. The Aug. 17 announcement brings the current award total, since the program began, to more than $23 million.

The grants will fund a diverse array of projects that will tell this important story in a variety of ways. Using grant funds, Yale University will convene a two-day public symposium and develop related high school curriculum in partnership with Brown University to mark the 75th anniversary of President Franklin D. Roosevelt’s signing of Executive Order 9066, which led to the incarceration of Japanese Americans during WWII.

The Chicago chapter of the JACL will use grant funds to engage college-aged students in learning about the impacts of incarceration on Japanese American communities during WWII through educational trips to Los Angeles’ Little Tokyo neighborhood and the Manzanar National Historic Site.

Japanese American Confinement Sites grants may be awarded to projects associated with the 10 War Relocation Authority centers established in 1942 and more than 40 additional confinement sites.

The program’s mission is to teach future generations about the injustice of the WWII confinement of Japanese Americans and inspire commitment to justice under the law.

Successful proposals are chosen through a competitive process that requires applicants to match the grant award with $1 in nonfederal funds or “in-kind” contributions for every $2 they receive in federal money.

PACIFIC CITIZEN VENTURES INTO E-COMMERCE

If you’ve visited PacificCitizen.org in the last few weeks, you might have noticed ads for products sold by Amazon.com embossed into many stories. The ads are for products that you might already shop for, like Japanese foods.

Those ads represent the “soft launch” of the Amazon Associates program with the Pacific Citizen. This program is a way for the P.C. to earn some extra money from readers who shop online using Amazon.com.

With JACL’s thousands of members nationwide, we here at the Pacific Citizen figured that there must be a sizable number in that group who use Amazon.com frequently for their e-commerce needs — and for those who feel inclined to support the Pacific Citizen’s mission, it’s an easy way to buy what you want and help the P.C. earn a little extra money.

The way it works: When you visit PacificCitizen.org and click on an Amazon.com ad, a “cookie” or bit of code is put into your browser for 24 hours. If within those 24 hours you purchase the advertised item — or any item sold on Amazon.com — that cookie allows the P.C. to get a small percentage of the sale.

If you frequent Amazon.com — maybe you’re an Amazon Prime customer — and happen to be inclined to help the Pacific Citizen, we ask that you visit PacificCitizen.org and click on an Amazon.com ad like the one below our newsletter. Then, when you do your shopping on Amazon.com within that 24-hour period, the Pacific Citizen will eventually get a small part of that sale deposited directly into our checking account.

In other words, you get what you want, and we get what we need. And if you’re not an Amazon.com customer, this is a good opportunity to give it a try — instead of driving to a grocery store and lugging home a 15-pound sack of rice up a flight of stairs, you can have it delivered to your doorstep. No backbreaking! In the coming months, we’ll be rolling out some other innovations on PacificCitizen.org to better serve our far-flung JACLers.

In the meantime, though, visit PacificCitizen.org — and start clicking!

Las Vegas welcomes the 72nd Annual Manzanar Reunion, and attendees are once again reminded of the importance of ensuring such human rights violations are never again repeated.

By Charles James, Contributor

Mirroring the continuing and sad history of racism in the United States that played out in violence on the streets of Charlottesville, Va., last month was yet another reminder of why the 72nd Annual Manzanar Concentration Camp Reunion, held Aug. 14-15 in Las Vegas, Nev., is as important as ever, as are the reunions and pilgrimages held at former World War II American concentration camps across the country.

Two hundred and twenty-two former camp incarcerees, family members and friends met at the California Hotel and Casino to remember the lives of racism faced by Japanese Americans and those of Japanese ancestry during WWII — and how they endured and overcame it.

The Manzanar Reunion is increasingly a reminder that, as time moves forward, there is as important as ever, as are the reunions and pilgrimages held at former World War II American concentration camps across the country.

The numbers are dwindling quickly as former camp incarcerees fall into their 80s and 90s, signaling a time when there will be very few, if any, left with direct experience and knowledge of what life inside the incarceration camps was like. Reunions and pilgrimages allow those attending to impart information to others so that no one forgets and see repeated.

This year’s gathering brought with it the sad news of the loss of Grace Oda Anderson, the daughter of George and Fujiko (Nomura) Oda. Her parents met at the camp. She was described as a “driving force in planning and delivering the Manzanar Reunions the last six years.” Anderson was only 65 years old when she passed away unexpectedly on Oct. 20. More than 300 people attended her service to celebrate her memory.

The Oda family is still very much involved in the Manzanar Reunion — Marian Oda Murphy serves as vice chair, with other family members such as Dorothy Oda, Marilyn Kishi (Oda) and a host of others related to the Oda family helping her out.

This year’s guest speaker was Dennis Ogawa from the University of Hawaii in Honolulu. Ogawa is a professor in the department of American Studies and author of numerous books on Japanese Americans, most notably “Jan Ken Po: The World of Hawai’i’s Japanese Americans” and “Kodomo no Tame ni: For the Sake of the Children.”

According to the 1940 U.S. Census, there were 127,000 people of Japanese ancestry living in the United States at that time. There were 112,353 living in the three states in the West Coast that they were not forced into incarceration camps were American citizens, half of whom were children. A few fortunate Japanese Americans lived far enough away from the West Coast that they were not forced into the incarceration camps.

Seventy-five years ago, under Executive Order 9066 signed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt (its legality later upheld by the Supreme Court), 10 War Relocation Authority incarceration camps were established in Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Idaho, Utah and Wyoming. Most suffered great financial loss. The cultural traditions and authority of the older immigrants were also upended.

Despite the egregious violations of human and civil rights inflicted on them, some 25,600 Japanese Americans from both inside and outside the incarceration camps entered into the United States Armed Forces to fight for their country. And in their minds, the U.S. was never not their country. The last American concentration camp closed in March 1946. One interesting couple at the reunion was Marie (Saito) and her husband, Earnie Masumoto. They attended in honor of Marie’s father, George Saito, a Nisei soldier who served in the U.S. Army.

Saito enlisted in the Army while he and his family were imprisoned at the Manzanar concentration camp. He met Marie’s mother, Kinuko, while serving as an interpreter in post-war Japan during the occupation, where he served as an interpreter. At the age of 6 months, Marie and her mother moved to Los Angeles. They were later joined by her father, who was born near Little Tokyo and grew up in Little Tokyo and Boyle Heights. Marie Masumoto is an accomplished independent researcher of Japanese American history. She volunteers for the Hirasaki National Resource Center at the Japanese American National Museum, as well as the Manzanar National Historic Site. She has excavated several archeological gardens built during the WWII incarceration of Japanese Americans. She also volunteers for the annual Manzanar Pilgrimage, conducting tours of the gardens, and has contributed three articles about the concentration camps to the online Densho Encyclopedia.

Earline Masumoto was born in May 1943 in the Topaz Internment Camp in Utah. His parents owned a Japanese souvenir shop in San Francisco’s Chinatown. After the end of WWII, the family moved to East Los Angeles. According to his writings in Densho Encyclopedia, Masumoto graduated from Garfield High School, dropped out of East Los Angeles Community College, got a drafting job at Hughes Aerospace Group in 1965 as a contractor and later contracted at several commercial and military companies until returning to Hughes Electro Optics Company in 1985. Hughes is now a part of the Raytheon Company, where he worked as a principle mechanical engineer.

Manzanar Reunion attendee Bo Sakaguchi was 17 when his family was forced to move from North Hollywood to Manzanar in April 1942. “We were told we could take one suitcase,” he recalled. “My suitcase was filled with candy and gum. No clothes, just candy and gum. I had a terrible sweet tooth.”

Sakaguchi would graduate from Manzanar High School in 1943. His family moved back to the San Fernando Valley in 1945 after the end of the war.

Another attendee, Harry Nakada, who celebrated his 93rd birthday on Aug. 16, was joined by 18 members of his family — the largest family group attending the reunion.

In April 1942, Nakada was only 16 when he was forced to relocate with his family in West Los Angeles to Manzanar. His parents were Kuizo and Kamako Nakada from Okinawa. The family was given three weeks to gather their possessions and move to Manzanar. After the war ended in 1945, the family moved back to West Los Angeles, where his father owned property.

Harry Nakada helped design and maintain the Japanese Garden, a 6.5-acre public Japanese garden located on the grounds of the Tillman Water Reclamation Plant in the central San Fernando Valley.

Susumu “Sus” Ioki is 89 years old and lives in Venice, Calif. He lived in Block 14 at Manzanar and was friends with Shizuko Fujioka (Sakahara), who lived in Block 12. He was sent to the camp in 1942 at age 13, and both he and Shizuko graduated with the Manzanar High School Class of 1945. His father owned a wholesale cut flower business near Marina Del Rey, Calif., where he worked for 30 years, before later managing a computer center for a medical company for 13 years.

Ioki and Shizuko Fujioka spent time with Tom Nishimura at the reunion. Nishimura was Kuizo’s future husband. “Babe” would meet Shizuko at L.A. Community College, and they would marry.

Reunions allow these types of friendships to flourish and continue decades later.

His father owned a wholesale cut flower business near Marina Del Rey, Calif., where he worked for 30 years, before later managing a computer center for a medical company for 13 years.

Ioki and Shizuko Fujioka spent time with Tom Nishimura at the reunion. Nishimura was Kuizo’s future husband. “Babe” would meet Shizuko at L.A. Community College, and they would marry.

Reunions allow these types of friendships to flourish and continue decades later.

Shig and Candice Kuwahara met at a dance festival following the end of World War II. In April 1942, Nakada was only 16 when he was forced to relocate with his family in West Los Angeles to Manzanar. His parents were Kuizo and Kamako Nakada from Okinawa. The family was given three weeks to gather their possessions and move to Manzanar. After the war ended in 1945, the family moved back to West Los Angeles, where his father owned property.

Harry Nakada helped design and maintain the Japanese Garden, a 6.5-acre public Japanese garden located on the grounds of the Tillman Water Reclamation Plant in the central San Fernando Valley.

Susumu “Sus” Ioki is 89 years old and lives in Venice, Calif. He lived in Block 14 at Manzanar and was friends with Shizuko Fujioka (Sakahara), who lived in Block 12. He was sent to the camp in 1942 at age 13, and both he and Shizuko graduated with the Manzanar High School Class of 1945. His father owned a wholesale cut flower business near Marina Del Rey, Calif., where he worked for 30 years, before later managing a computer center for a medical company for 13 years.

Ioki and Shizuko Fujioka spent time with Tom Nishimura at the reunion. Nishimura was Kuizo’s future husband. “Babe” would meet Shizuko at L.A. Community College, and they would marry.

Reunions allow these types of friendships to flourish and continue decades later.

Shig and Candice Kuwahara met at a dance festival after the war when a mutual friend that was with Shig tapped Candice on the shoulder from behind. She turned around to see who did it, and on seeing Shig — who she did not know — gave him a withering look. When the mutual friend called out to her, “Hey, Candice! It’s me!” she then realized it hadn’t been Shig at all. That tap on the shoulder however turned out to be a lucky day for Shig. The two of them began dating, and they eventually married.

Another interesting twist is that while Shig had been incarcerated in Manzanar, Candice was sent to another camp. As a little girl, she had grown up in the neighborhood where the family of Shiro Fujioka lived prior to the war. Shig would fondly remembers as a little girl riding on the back of Ted Fujioka, the son of Shiro Fujioka, featured in the May 20, 2016, edition of the Pacific Citizen.

Ted enlisted in the Army after graduating from Heart Mountain High School at the age of 18 in 1943. He would go on to serve with the most-highly decorated military unit in U.S. history, the 442nd Regimental Combat Team. He was only a little more than 19 years of age when he was killed on Nov. 6, 1944, by a German artillery shell while serving in France.

It’s a small world.

Looking back on the history of racism that resulted in the creation of American concentration camps, readers might well ask why anyone would want to remember such a past, much less come together to celebrate or remember it? The answer is simple: to not ever again repeat it, ever.
JACL Successfully Completes Its First Asian Pacific Islander Youth Legacy Program

Forty participants from across the U.S. travel to Los Angeles to learn more about the World War II incarceration experience and its aftermath.

Enthused by the experience of taking part in JACL's newly established Asian Pacific Islander Youth Legacy Program, one of the participants said, “This experience has been more amazing than I could have imagined. Although I am not Japanese American, I have felt so welcomed in this community and program.” Another participant exclaimed, “An impactful, very important lesson and story that needs to be shared, taught and remembered.”

On July 25-28 and again on Aug. 8-11, 40 Asian American youth from throughout the United States ventured to Los Angeles to take part in the JACL Asian Pacific Islander Youth Legacy Program (YLP), which was held at the Japanese American National Museum in Little Tokyo.

The program provides Asian Pacific Islander youth with the opportunity to learn about the World War II incarceration experience through four days of classroom presentations and tours that include a trip to Manzanar. The 40 participants were selected from a pool of 67 applicants from 19 states.

The YLP classroom sessions included a presentation on the history of incarceration by former JACL Midwest Regional Director Bill Yoshino, the impact of incarceration and the Redress campaign.

The YLP participants took part in a storytelling workshop at JANM to prepare them for their visit to Manzanar.

Seabrook JACL Commemorates 70th Anniversary

In addition to celebrating its unique place in history, the chapter holds its 2017 awards banquet.

The Seabrook JACL Chapter conducted its annual awards banquet in conjunction with its 70th anniversary at the Ramada Inn in Vineland, N.J., on July 16.

The chapter celebrated its unique place in history, as Seabrook, N.J., was the location where more than 2,500 Japanese Americans relocated to start new lives and obtain employment after being released from American concentration camps in 1945.

The banquet welcomed more than 250 guests in attendance, and all were able to see clearly why the community of Seabrook is hailed as “a national treasure.”

The awards banquet capped a weekend of activities centered around the 73rd anniversary of the Seabrook Reunion, where the theme was entitled, “Your Life, Your Legacy.”

The John Fuyuume Citizenship Award was presented to the Hon. Norman Y. Mineta, the first Asian American mayor of a major city, the first Japanese American from the mainland to be elected to Congress and the first Asian American to serve in a presidential cabinet.

The chapter also recognized its 2017 graduates and citizenship/scholarship awardees.

Honored during the program were Bryce Mick (John Fuyuume Scholarship), Grace Tolbert (Charles & Mary Nagao Scholarship), Kevin Nakai Jr. (Seabrook JACL Scholarship), Felix Gray (Bridgeton High School), Mikayli Drew (Cumberland County TEC), Dane Johnson (Cumberland Regional High School), Mitch Alcorn (Millville Senior High School), Caroline Barton (Author P. Schalick High School), Cynthia Esteves (Vineland High School), Bryan Cortazar (Woodruff School) and Gabriella DeFrancisco (Woodruff School).

John Seabrook, author and writer at the New Yorker magazine, served as the banquet’s keynote speaker. Denise Nakano, Emmy-winning journalist from NBC10 in Philadelphia, served as mistress of ceremonies.

Twin Cities JACL Co-Sponsors ‘At the Movies: Hidden Histories’

The program is held in conjunction with Paul Kitagaki Jr.’s exhibition ‘Gambatte! Legacy of an Enduring Spirit: Japanese American WWII Incarceration, Then & Now.’

Twin Cities JACL/Minnesota Historical Society’s 2017 “Day of Remembrance” program, which will be screened on Oct. 14 from 3-5 p.m.

Both programs will be held at the Historic Fort Snelling Visitors Center.

“Gambatte! Legacy of an Enduring Spirit: Japanese American WWII Incarceration, Then & Now” is free and open to the public through Oct. 28 at the Historic Fort Snelling Visitors Center.

Can’t Decide What to Watch in a World of So Much Choice? Help Is Here

By Ron Mori

It’s almost fall, and our household is getting back into the swing of our normal routine. In recent years, that didn’t necessarily mean getting excited about the upcoming lineup of new fall TV shows. In fact, it’s been the exact opposite in our household — TV shows have come and gone, reality TV shows have lost our interest and YouTube, Netflix and other streaming content has now become the norm.

That’s why I was excited to hear that AARP recently announced a new initiative called “TV for Grownups,” which will offer online reviews, news and even awards starting in 2018.

The new project follows AARP’s Movies for Grownups initiative. In short, TV for Grownups aims to connect AARP members with relevant programming while also help demystify the technology associated with home entertainment.

I’ll be the first to admit that I need help when it comes to demystifying my remote control, let alone all of the programming options available today.

I used to think that the golden age of TV had passed us, when we had three main networks, cable and streaming, as well as help viewers make savvy choices when choosing TV-related devices and apps, service providers and subscription-based platforms.

Personally, just helping me navigate the many viewing options is worth its weight in gold at a time when so much TV and streaming content is available.

While the days of the three main networks are long gone, what has not changed is that the 50-plus audience watches more TV than any other age group.

I have cable, but I rarely access cable channels during a normal week. In our household, it has become a situation of too many choices and not enough time in a week.

This new golden age has more than 450 scripted TV series available for your viewing pleasure. And with streaming services such as Hulu, Netflix, Amazon and more, you can enjoy your favorite shows on nearly any e-device you have.

At a certain point, some of you may say it’s too much. If you’re like me, the concept of TV for Grownups is exciting to help filter the choices available and connect you to the smartest, most relevant, most entertaining shows for viewers over 50.

TV for Grownups will feature news, reviews and interviews in each issue of AARP The Magazine and online every week. And, as we do with our influential “Movies for Grownups” program, AARP will give TV for Grownups awards starting in 2018 to recognize excellent work by TV actors and show creators.

Join me and checkout TV for Grownups at aarp.org/tvforgrownups.
